Gamaliel I, the Elder, a Pharisee and celebrated teacher of the Law (Rabban), at whose feet S. Paul sat. Because he advised the Synedrium to desist from persecuting the Apostles, lest they be found to be fighting against God (Acts VI, 34 ss.), the legend made him a Christian and a martyr. The tradition is that Gamaliel was converted to Christianity even before St. Paul and that he buried St. Stephen on his own estate, he himself with S. Nicodemus afterwards sharing the tomb with the Protomartyr. The priest Lucian from Jerusalem (Clement. Recognit., I, 65) relates that with the relics of S. Stephen also those of Nicodemus, Gamaliel and his son Abibon were found at Kaphargamala. F. 3 Aug., Rom. Mart.; at Pisa, 2 Dec. Transl. of Ss. Gamaliel, Nicodemus and Abibon, Mm., dp.; 3 Aug. Gaudentius, C., an ecclesiastical writer and bishop of Brescia; b. about 360. He was educated by S. Philastrius of Brescia, whom he styles his father. When a young man he visited the monks of Egypt and of the Holy Land, and entered a monastery at Caesarea in Cappadocia, to escape the honors and applause of the world. On the death of S. Philastrius, the people of Brescia sought S. Gaudentius for their bishop, and would have no other, and so he was forced to return home under pain of excommunication and was consecrated bishop of Brescia, A.D. 387. He had brought with him from the East many relics, which he deposited in the basilica "Concilium Sanctorum." In 405 he went to Constantinople and interceded with Emperor Arcadius for S. John Chrysostom, but was imprisoned, ill-treated, and deported to the West. He is chiefly known by his Paschal Sermons. D. about 427. His body is in the basilica of S. John (Concilium Sanctorum); it was elevated 9 July, 1595. F. 25 Oct. (inserted by Baronius) Rom. Mart.; dp. at Brescia.—C. E.—W.W.—H. L.—P. B.—Biogr.

Gelasius, M. He was an actor, a clown in the theatre of Heliopolis in Phenicia (Baalbek). When a parody of the Christian rites was performed on the stage and Gelasius was baptized in jest, he saw in the font a dazzling light; he professed himself a Christian and was stoned by the mob outside the theatre. In 297, his body was brought to the village of Meriamne, of which he was a native, and an oratory was erected by the Christians over his tomb. (v. S. Gelasinus). Perhaps the western S. Genesius is identical with S. Gelasius of Heliopolis. F. 27 Feb. MGr.—H. L.—P. B.

Gelasius (Giolla-Mac-Liac), archbp. of Armagh. He was b. in 1087, as son of the poet Diarmaid; appointed canon of the Columban abbey of Derry and elected abbot of Armagh (1121); in 1137, he was chosen archbishop of Armagh to succeed S. Malachy; he rebuilt the cathedral (destroyed by fire in 1135) and held a synod at Kells (1152) against simony and usury, another at Mellifont (1157). To make peace between the contending chiefs, he called an assembly at Athboy (1167); he submitted to Henry II, in 1172; d. in 1174. F. 27 March.—O'H., III, 965.—Ins., 358.

Gelasius, C., Bp. of Poitiers, 5th century. A parish is named after him near Niort. F. 26 Aug. P. B.

Gelasius I, C., Pope, 1 March 492 to 496; b. at Rome of Afro-Roman parents, after Leo I the most important pope of the 5th century. He continued the fight against the Acacian schism, vigorously emphasizing the Roman primacy. By his prudence he reconciled many Oriental bishops, notably Euphemius of Constantinople. He combated Pelagianism and Manichaeism, abrogated the pagan feast of the Lupercalia in February and appointed the terms for ordinations. Some liturgical reforms are ascribed to him, but he is not the author of the Gelasian Sacramentary, which is a compilation of the 6th century. Also the celebrated catalogue of prohibited books, a list of the canon of Holy Scripture and apocryphal and heretical writings, is not genuine (part of it belongs to Pope Damasus, other parts, perhaps, to Pope Hormisdas). He repressed the Mani-cheans, who taught that wine was a product of the devil, by compelling the laity, for a time, to receive Holy Communion under both appearances, and made other useful disciplinary laws. Genesius (Genès), M., at Arles. He had been a soldier; for his proficiency in writing he was made notary by the magistrates of Arles. When an edict against the Christians was issued, he was ordered to make a copy of it; but he flung the edict at the feet of the magistrate and fled. He was killed by arrows whilst swimming in the Rhone River, thus receiving the baptism not of water, but of blood, for he was still a catechumen. Era uncertain (under Maximian Hercules?). Genesius, M., in Rome. According to a late tradition he was martyred at Rome under Diocletian, in 303; he was an actor; wishing to ridicule Christian rites, he brought the sacrament of baptism on the stage, but when the water had been poured on him, the grace of the Holy Spirit touched his heart: he declared himself a Christian and was beheaded by order of the Emperor. He was buried in the cemetery of S. Hippolytus ("in agro Verano"). The story may be fictitious; Genesius is hardly an historical person, but rather the Roman counterpart of S. Gelasius of Hieropolis (cf. Ss. Ardalion, Porphyrius, etc.). F. 25 Aug. Rom. Mart.; at San Miniato (principal patron of the diocese) dp. 1 cl. oct.; at Gravina dp. maj. (minor patron). Geneviève (Genovefa), V., Patroness of Paris; b. at Nanterre on the outskirts of Paris, in 422. She herded sheep for her father on the slopes of Mt. Valerien at Nanterre; according to the legend, her future greatness was foretold by S. Germain of Auxerre; when 15 years old, she took a nun's veil, as she had promised S. Germain when only seven years old. It seems, however, that she did not live in a regular religious community, and, after the death of her parents, moved to Paris, where she led a life of penance, prayer and charity, together with a few pious women. She prevented the inhabitants from fleeing into the country upon the approach of the Huns (451). Through her prayers Attila the Hun suddenly changed his devastating course through Gaul and turned aside his army, when still south of Paris. She also consoled and helped them during the famine, when the Franks blockaded the city. She possessed great influence with kings and the people. Through her efforts the church of Ss. Peter and Paul (S. Denis) was built. D. 3 Jan., 512, 89 years old, and was buried at the side of Clovis I. Her famous shrine was erected in 1242 by the abbot of Ste. Geneviève. Her relics were scattered in 1791, the rest destroyed in 1871. Her church (built by Louis XV), is a national monument (Panthéon); her empty shrine is now at St. Etienne. George, M., one of the 14 Holy Helpers, called by the Greeks “Megalomartyr” (Great Martyr) and “Tropaiphoros” (Trophy-bearer). Though honored alike in the East and in the West, S. George is one of those Saints of whom we know little. According to a legend, he was born of noble Christian parents in Cappadocia. As he grew to manhood he became a soldier; his courage in battle soon won him promotion, and he was attached to the personal staff of Emperor Diocletian. When this ruler decided to enter upon his campaign of persecution, S. George resigned his commission and bitterly complained to the Emperor. He was immediately arrested, and when promises failed to make him change his mind, he was tortured with great cruelty; God wrought extraordinary miracles in his favor. At last, he was taken to the outskirts of the city and beheaded. (D. S., 120). The acts of S. George were vitiated (by the Arians) already in the 5th century. The episode of S. George delivering the king’s daughter from the power of a dragon, is of late provenience and cannot be traced further back than the 12th or 13th century. Whilst some authors assert that his legend is nothing but a counterpart of the pagan myth of Mithras, others claim that it is the distorted story of the Arian bishop of Alexandria, George of Cappadocia. The existence of the martyr S. George, however, cannot be disputed, though all we know of him is that he was a Christian who was martyred probably at Lydda in Palestine, before the era of Constantine the Great. His sepulchre was discovered at Lydda, in 1868. His cult is proved by an inscription in the Trachonitis in 367. Uncertain is his position in life: he may have been an army officer, or anything else. The earliest narrative of his martyrdom known to us is full of the most extravagant marvels: Three times George is put to death, chopped into small pieces, buried deep in the earth and consumed by fire, but each time he is resuscitated by God. Besides this we have dead men brought to life to be baptized, wholesale conversions, including that of the “Empress Alexandra,” armies and idols destroyed instantaneously, beams of timber suddenly bursting into leaf, and finally milk flowing instead of blood from the martyr’s severed head (C. E., Herbert Thurston). He cannot be identified with the nameless Christian who tore down the edict of persecution at Nicomedia. The so-called Gelasian Decree mentions apocryphal (Arian) acts of S. George. All over the Orient, in Greece, Italy, and Sicily, numerous churches were dedicated to him in the sixth century. His cult spread in the West, principally during the crusades. Richard Lionheart placed his army under the protection of S. George. Adamnan knows him as patron of warriors and travellers. As dragon slayer he first appears in the twelfth century. This legendary feature, therefore, was certainly not taken from the myths of Perseus or Horus. Besides St. Stephen, he is the only martyr who is venerated in the entire Church. From about the 13th century he came to be regarded as patron of England, partially displacing S. Edward the Confessor. His feast, in England, was declared a holyday of obligation by the national synod of Oxford in 1222 (abrogated in 1778). His relics are scattered over the entire Church; his head is at Rome, in S. Giorgio in Velabro. F. 23 Apr. Rom. Mart.; sem. in the Latin Church; in the Syrian Church, 1 cl.; in the Greek Church full office 23 Apr. and 3 Nov. F. of his Patronage last Sunday of July; at Locorotondo (diocese of Ostuni), 2nd Sunday in July; in the diocese of Trieste, Apparition of S. George, 21 July. S. George is principal patron of England, Catalaunia (Spain), Liguria (Italy), Aragon, Georgia, Modena, Ferrara (24 Apr.), of the isle of Syros, dioceses of Wilna, Limburg, Reggio di Calabria, and other dioceses, also of the Teutonic Knights, minor patron of Portugal, Lithuania, Constantinople. He is protector of soldiers, archers, knights, saddlers, sword-cutlers, and of horses, against fever, etc. He is mentioned daily in the Greek mass. Germana (Germaine) Cousin, V.; b. at Pibrac, near Toulouse, in 1579. Her father was a poor laborer; the child was scrofulous; the stepmother took an aversion to the poor girl and treated her with great harshness. She was sent to herd the sheep, and, as shepherdess, led a life of prayer and charity, in the midst of poverty, suffering, dirt, and neglect, rich by the treasures of the love of God. The legend relates that bread which she had prepared for the poor was changed into a bouquet of roses. She died unattended on her strawbed, 22 years old, in 1601. Her body was found incorrupt in 1644. Beatified 17 May, 1854; canonized, 29 June, 1867. F. 15 June dp. 2 cl. at Toulouse; dp. in all France.—Seeb. I, 449.—F. J.—P. B.—Mg.

Germanus, patriarch of Constantinople, 715–30; b. about 639, a son of the Byzantine patrician Justinian; he was ordained in the cathedral of Constantinople and appointed bishop of Cysicus. For a short time (synod of Constantinople, 712) he sided with the Monothelites; chosen patriarch of Constantinople, 11 Aug., 715, in a synod of Constantinople, 716, he anathematized the Monothelites. When the iconoclast storm burst forth, he energetically defended the cult of images, and was compelled to resign by Emperor Leo III, the Isaurian, 17 Jan., 730; he was succeeded by the pliant Anastasius. D. over 90 years old, 12 May, 733, at Platanium, the home of his family. Some of his writings

Germanus, C., Bp. of Paris, 555–76; b. near Autun, in 496, he was ordained priest there in 530; ten years later he was chosen administrator and abbot of S. Symphorien at Autun. Happening to be in Paris when the see was vacant, he was elected (554) bishop of that city, and archchaplain to King Childebert I. He was a learned, austere and apostolic man, an eminent orator and liturgist; a peacemaker between the malignant Merovingian princes and their wives (letter to Queen Brunehild). On account of his charity he was styled "Father of the Poor," and by his zeal and example wrought a wonderful change in the morals of the people, converting even the careless King Childebert to a Christian life. The latter founded the monastery of St. Vincent (S. Germain-des-Près) in which he was buried (561). S. Germain also fearlessly reproved the licentious King Charibert I. He was very active at the synods of Paris (557 and 573) and of Tours (567). D. 28 May, Rom. Mart.; dp. maj. at Paris; Tr. rel. 25 July simpl. Germanus, C., Bp. of Man. He was a son of Liainain, sister of S. Patrick; b. in Armorica (Brittany), about 410. He went to Ireland to follow S. Patrick, about 440; in 450, he crossed over to Ceredigion, Wales, and took charge of the education of S. Brioc, S. Iltyd, and S. Patrick McSannan. Then he returned to Brittany, where he gave his patrimony to the church; to obtain the confirmation of the grant, he went to Paris; in 462, he left Gaul to meet S. Patrick in Britain and engaged in a bitter contest with Gwrtheyrn, who had invited the Jutes to Britain; having returned to Ireland, he was appointed bishop of Man, about 466. D. in Man, after 46. His Life has been confounded with that of Germain of Auxerre and also in the Dedication of his churches he has been everywhere supplanted by him. F. in Man, 3 July.—B. G., III, 60.—P. B.

Germanus, C., Bp. of Auxerre, France, the most illustrious saint of Gaul in the 5th century. B. of noble parents at Auxerre, in 378; he studied civil law in Rome and married Eustachia, a lady of noble rank, equal to his own. Emperor Honorius made him governor (dux) of his home province. In his youth he gave no tokens of that spiritual greatness which distinguished him afterwards. After 418, however, his manner of life underwent a complete change. He received Holy Orders (against his will?), from S. Amator, bishop of Auxerre, whose second successor he became. He governed his diocese with wonderful success for thirty years. A message having come to the bishops of Gaul from those of Britain, imploring their aid against the Pelagian heresy, S. Germain and St. Loup of Troyes were chosen, in 429, to go on to Britain to oppose Pelagianism. On the way S. Germain, at Nanterre, blessed Ste. Geneviève then a little child. The two bishops attended a council of the British prelates, probably at Verulam, and S. Germain led the discouraged Britons to the famous "Alleluja Victory" over the Picts and Scots at Maes Garmon. In 447, he was sent a second time, together with S. Severus of Treves, to Britain to fight Pelagianism. The next year he went to Ravenna, Italy, to ask pardon of Emperor Valentinian III for the rash revolt of the Armoricans of Britanny. He died at Ravenna, 31 July, 448. Of his miracles his raising up from the dead of the son of Volusian, secretary to the Patrician Sigisvult of Ravenna, is the most famous. His relics were brought to Auxerre and deposited there, Oct. 1, elevated in 859, but dispersed by the Calvinists, in 1567. A finger was brought to Selby abbey, England, 1150. Gertrude of Nivelles, V., abbess, O. S. B.; b. in 631, a daughter of Pepin of Landen and S. Iduberga, a younger sister of S. Begha. She took the veil at the monastery of Nivelles, Belgium, founded by S. Amand and endowed by her mother. In 652, she was elected abbess of Nivelles; as such she assisted Ss. Foillan and Ultan in founding the monastery of Fosses. She possessed a great knowledge of S. Scripture, a tender charity, and an indefatigable zeal. She resigned in 658; d. 17 March, 659, and was venerated immediately after her death; she was one of the most popular saints of the Middle Ages. Agnes, the third abbess of Nivelles, erected a church in her honor. She is patroness against fever, rats and mice, also of travellers ("Gertrudenminne"). F. 17 March, Rom. Gertrude the Great, a Cistercian nun and mystic writer; b. 6 Jan., 1256, probably in Thuringia; when five years of age she entered the aluminate in Helfta, near Eisieben, Saxony, and was educated under Abbess Gertrude of Hackeborn and S. Mechtildis. In her 26th year was granted to her the first of that series of visions which ceased only at her death. The most prominent feature of her piety was her devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, the symbol of the immense charity of Christ. She is the first apostle of the devotion to the Sacred Heart. Her pure, childlike, amiable, and humble, yet strong and glowing soul shines forth in her work Legatus Divinae Pietatis. Her Insinuationes Divinae Pietatis are comparable to the writings of S. Teresa in sublime imagery. She also took an active part in the composition of the Liber Specialis Gratiae, written by her teacher and friend, S. Mechtildis. Her smaller ascetical works were lost, except the Exercitia Spiritualia, a collection of prayers. Her writings (composed in good Latin) belong to the best products of mystic theology. She d. at Helfta, 17 Nov., 1302. She was formerly (and is still in the Roman Breviary) confounded with Gertrude of Hackeborn, a sister (?) of S. Mechtildis. She was never abbess, but a simple nun. Her relics with those of S. Mechtildis are hidden in the old Trudkloster (now Protestant) at Helfta. Her name was received into the Roman Mart. in 1677 (without any formal canonization), 15 Nov. Before the 17 century her feast was unknown; in the Latin Church 15 Nov. dp.; in the Benedictine and Cistercian Orders 17 Nov. dp. 2 cl. Gervasius and Protasius, protomartyrs and patrons of Milan. According to their legend (which is falsely attributed to S. Ambrose), they were twins, sons of the consular officer Vitalis and of Valeria. When, ten years after the martyrdom of Ss. Vitalis and Valeria, the Roman general Astasius came to Milan during the campaign against the Marcomanni (166), he gave orders for the arrest of the Christians. Gervasius and Protasius were brought before him. Gervasius was beaten with leaden whips until he was dead; when Protasius declared his readiness to die like his brother, his head was struck off. In course of time the place where the martyrs were buried, was forgotten, but it was revealed to S. Ambrose in a vision, in 386; he found the bodies in the cemeterial church of Ss. Nabor and Felix outside the city and in solemn procession brought them into the new basilica, now called S. Ambrogio Maggiore. On Easter day, 397, Ambrose himself was buried at the side of these martyrs. It has been supposed that with the tomb the very existence of these saints had been forgotten at Milan, but this is by no means evident. It was because Ss. Gervasius and Protasius were considered the protomartyrs of Milan that there was such rejoicing at the discovery of their bodies. In 1864 the relics of these two martyrs, with those of S. Ambrose, were found under the high altar of S. Ambrogio. The acts of Ss. Gervasius and Protasius are spurious; the brothers were not sons of Vitalis and Valeria. Harris and others deny their existence and pretend that they are the pagan Dioscuri in Christian garb. The bones of these two saints are said to have been carried away by the Emperor Frederic Barbarossa and given to the churches of Alt-Breisach (Baden) and Soissons; but the relics shown there are not genuine. The true relics of these saints are to-day resting under the high altar of the basilica of S. Ambrogio. Gervol, 5th abbot of Fontenelle, towards the end of the 8th century. He built many churches in the valley of Fontenelle and is venerated at S. Yandrilie near Ivetot. F. 4 May.—P. B.

Gerwich, C., O. Cist., founder of Waldsassen in Westphalia, in 1133. 5 Oct.—Kr., 324.—Str. G., 114.

Gerwin, abbot of St-Riquier, C. He was a relative of S. Leo IX; b. at Laon, canon at Reims and Benedictine monk at St-Vannes at Verdun, under Abbot Richard, with whom, in 1025, he made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land. In 1040, he was elected abbot of St-Riquier and introduced there the reform of St-Vannes. In 1049, he assisted at the synod of Reims; d. 3 March, 1075, of leprosy. F. 1 March at St-Riquier.—P. B.—Mg.

Gerwin, second abbot (O. S. B.) at Aldenburg (Oudenbourg) in Flanders. He made several pilgrimages to Rome and Palestine; for some time he was a monk at S. Winoc's near Corbie, then a recluse at Mt. Cassel, near Oudenbourg, of which establishment he was chosen abbot; but he resigned and returned to his solitude. D. 17 Apr., 1117, at Waes in the forest of Cosfort. F. 17 Apr.—H. L.—Mg.

Géry = S. Gaugeric of Cambrai (11 Aug.) or S. Desiderius of Cahors (26 Nov.), or S. Gerius.

Gesina, the feminine form of Giso (the Spear).

Gestin, priest, hermit at Plestin, diocese of St-Brieuc, Brittany. Whilst he was on a pilgrimage to Rome, S. Infiannan took possession of his cell; after his return he built a new one near Plestin; 6th century. F. 6 Nov. (v. S. Jestin).—B. G., III, 294.

Getulius, M., at Torri; he was the husband of S. Symphorosa and an officer in Emperor Hadrian's army. After baptism, he retired with his brother Amantius to his villa at Gabii (Torri) in the Sabine mountains, where he gave himself to works of Christian charity; he converted the imperial vicar Cerealis. With a layman, Primitivus, he was imprisoned at Tivoli and after 27 days burnt at the stake on the Salarian Way, about 118; he was buried in his villa; Symphorosa retired to Tivoli. The body of S. Getulius is now in S. Angelo in Pescaria, at Rome. F. 10 June Rom. Mart.; at Tivoli dp. 2 cl. (minor patron), at Sabina dp. maj.—H. L.—P. B.

Geva, W., wife of the Frisian B. Everward, foundress of Freckenhord monastery, a. 851. 2 May.—Kr., 163.

Gewydd, patron of two churches in Brecon, Wales; 2 July.—S. Cewydd, son of Caw.

Gezzelin (Schetzel, Gotzelin), hermit at Schlebusrode (Schlebusch), near Mühlheim, diocese of Cologne; according to tradition he was shepherd for a Cistercian establishment and practiced great austerities; thus he never slept under a roof; d. 6 Aug., about 1138. In 1814, his relics were transferred to the parochial church of Schlebusch. He may be identical with S. Schetzel of Marienmünster in Luxemburg, with whom he is often confounded. He is patron against diseases of the skin.—D. G., I 55.—H. L.

Ghislain (Guilain, Gisleus), C., (not bishop); b. of Frankish parents; about 650, he founded the cell of Ss. Peter and Paul at Ursidungen (Castrilocus, Mons), later on called St-Ghislain, under a rule of his own, similar perhaps to the rule of S. Basil, which, in 930, was superseded by the rule of S. Benedict. According to his legendary life, he was b. in Greece, studied in Athens, and took the habit of the Basilians there; it is also claimed that the original rule of St-Ghislain was the rule of S. Basil. But these pretensions are fictitious. S. Ghislain was the spiritual guide of Ss. Waldeud and Aldegund; d. 9 Oct., about 680. His body was elevated in 929, and transferred to Château-Cambresis, but removed to St-Ghislain, in 1647. F. 9 Oct. dp. at Tournai and Namur; Tr. rel. at St-Ghislain 1 June and 6 Nov.—P. B.—A. B., 5, 207 and 6, 209.

Gibtrude (Gebtrude), nun at Faremoutier in the 7th century. F. 26 Oct.—P. B.

Gibrian, priest, C. A native of Ireland, he left for the continent with six brothers, Ss. Tressan, Helan, German, Veran, Abran, and Petran, and three sisters, Franchia, Promptia, and Posenna; desirous of seeking a retreat, they first sojourned in Brittany; in 508 they came to the neighborhood of Châlons-sur-Marne, and S. Gibrian fixed his abode in a solitude on Colé rivulet, near S. Tressan. D. about 515, in his solitude; about 890, his relics were brought to Reims; they were destroyed in 1793. F. 8 May; at Châlons, 7 May dp.—O'H., V, 129.—P. B.

Gicquel = S. Iudicael, 16 Dec.

Gideon = S. Gedeon, judge.

Gigar (Gegar), an apocryphal ruler of Syria; he is said to have warned Joseph and Mary to flee to Egypt from the Libanon, wherefore he was killed by Herod. 1st century. F. 9 Aug. in the Abyssinian Ch.—Cal. Copt.

Giguel = S. Iudicael, king.

Gilbert (Gillibert, Gille), Bp. of Limerick, Ireland, perhaps of Danish descent; he took a stand with S. Anselm against lay investiture and was legate of the Apostolic See for Ireland; d. 4 Feb., 1140. F. 4 Feb.—O'H., II, 322.

Gilbert of Sempringham, C., founder of the Gilbertines; b. at Sempringham, near Lincoln; his father was a Norman knight; having finished his studies at Paris, he was ordained priest and appointed rector of Sempringham and Terrington; after the death of his father, he founded a convent for poor girls (1135) at Sempringham, with strict closure and silence, under the rule of S. Benedict; shortly after he established a monastery of Augustinian Canons, with constitutions taken from the Cistercian rule. This double Order, of which he was the first "General Master," was approved by Eugene IV, in 1146. When S. Gilbert died, 700 men and 1,500 women lived under his rule. D. 4 Feb., 1189, 106 years old. His relics are at Sempringham; he was canonized in 1202. All the monasteries of his Order (which never spread outside of England) were dissolved under Henry VIII. F. 4 Feb. Rom. Mart.; by the Lateran Canons, 4 Feb. dp.; dp. maj. at Nottingham.—Ord., II, 30.—L. S.—Sl.

Gilbert (Gislebert), C., Bp. of Meaux; b. at Ham, of a noble Vermandois family; he was canon at St-Quentin, archdeacon at Meaux, and was elected bishop in 995; d. 13 Feb., 1010. His relics are in the cathedral. He is patron against dropsy. F. 13 Feb. dp. at Meaux.—P. B.—Mg.

Gilbert, C.; dp. at Chieti, 26 Feb. He may be = S. Gilbert of Sempringham.

Gilbert, Bp., C. For twenty years he was bishop of Caithness (Dornoch) in Scotland, for which diocese he built a cathedral. He was a zealous pastor of souls and also a valued servant of the Scottish kings of his time; d. in 1245. He was the last Scotsman who was canonized before the Reformation. No trace of S. Gilbert's resting place now remains. F. 1 April. Rams.—M. Bennet, p. 54.—Ftpr. 182.—Rams.

Gilbert, abbot of Neuffons (Clermont), O. Praem. He was an Auvergnat nobleman and took part in the crusade under Louis VII. After his return he, his wife S. Petronilla, and their daughter S. Pontia, took the habit of S. Norbert; they first founded the Premonstratensian nunnery at Aubeterre (1150), then the monastery for men at Neuffons (Neufontaines), where Gilbert was elected abbot; d. 6 June, 1152. His relics were elevated, 3 Oct., 1612. F. 24 Oct. Rom. Mart.; dp. maj., O. Praem.; 7 June at Moulins.—P. B.—Mg.

Gilbert (B.), second abbot of S. John the Baptist at Valenciennes; he had been a monk at St-Crespin-en-Chaie, Soissons; he suffered persecution at the hands of Baldwin IV, count of Hainaut; d. in 1185. F. 21 Aug.—P. B.

Gildard, priest at Lurey-le-Bourg (Nièvre), 7th century. His relics are at St-Loup near Nevers. F. 24 (31) Aug.—P. B.

Gildard (Godard), C., Bp. of Rouen. That he was a twin brother of S. Medard and that both were ordained priests, consecrated bishops, and died the same day, is pure fiction, invented in the 9th century. S. Gildard was dead at least five years when S. Medard was consecrated. He took part in a synod of Orléans; d. 8 June, 525. His body was brought to S. Medard at Soissons, in 838. F. 8 June, Rom. Mart.; at Rouen sem.; Tr. rel. 10 July.—P. B.

Gildas the Wise, abbot, C.; b. in Arecluta (on the Clyde) in 476, the year of the victory of the Briton Ambrose over the Picts and Scots. He was a grandson of S. Geraint and a scion of the usurper Cystennin Gorneu (Constantine). With his father Caw and his five brothers, he took refuge in Gwynedd, Wales, in 506; the next year he lost his wife and embraced the religious profession under S. Iltyd. In 510, he went to Ireland and visited S. Brigid, but was recalled when his brother Huail was slain by King Arthur (512). Arthur in blood fine granted lands to the family of Caw. After the battle of Mt. Badon (520) Gildas went to Rome and, on his way back, landed at Rhuys in Brittany and obtained a grant of land there. In 527 he returned to Britain to obtain recruits and, for a time, took charge of Llancarfan; in 530 he went to Glastonbury, but, about 534, returned to Rhuys. He composed his work De Excidio Britannie, about 544, whereupon his brother and sons were compelled to flee from Wales; 550-55 he took part in the conspiracy against the usurper Conmore; in 565, he visited King Ainmire of Ireland, and died at Rhuys, 29 Jan., 570. He is patron against rabies. He is the first British historian; called "Badonicus," because he was believed to have been b. in 520, on the day of the battle of Mt. Badon (Banesdowe). Some writers distinguish three Ss. Gildas: Gildas Albanus (because he was b. in Albania on the Clyde); Gildas Badonicus or the Wise; and Gildas of Rhuys. But Baring-Gould has conclusively shown that there was only one Gildas. F. 29 Jan. dp. 2 cl. in the diocese of Vannes; Tr. rel. 11 May. Brev. 16th century. B. G., III, 81.—Moran, 39.—Ins., 118. 11 May at Caldez.

Goswin, O. S. B., abbot of Anchin; b. at Douai, in 1086; he studied at Paris, where he was a ready opponent of Abélard; later on he taught theology and held a canonry at Douai; about 1113 he took the Benedictine habit at Anchin, was prior at St-Medard, Soissons, then (1133) abbot at Anchin; he also reformed St-Remy and St-Crépin; d. 9 Oct., 1166. F. 9 Oct.—P. B.—Mg.

Goteria, Malchus, and Madianus, Roman Mm. Their relics are in the church of S. Pancratius. F. 12 May.—H. L.

Gothalm (B.), C.; he followed S. Coloman, his master's son, and found him, after his martyrdom, at Stockerau; he died the same night, in 1020. His body was brought to Melk and was elevated in 1462. F. 26 July.—H. L.

Gothard, C. Following Migne the Fathers of Ramsgate claim that the chapel of S. Gothard in the Alpine mountain pass between Airolo and Andermatt, is dedicated to a holy hermit who had his cell there and who gave his name to the neighboring Mons Adulas (St. Gothard). But other hagiologists say that the chapel in the pass (as the chapels in the cathedrals of Milan and Genoa) is dedicated to S. Godehard of Hildesheim. The feast of the alleged hermit is on 25 Feb.—Rams.

Gothard, 9th Bp. of Mayence = S. Bothadus.

Gothbert (Godebert, Gobert), C., in the diocese of Reims; he gave his name to St-Gobert, diocese of Soissons; d. about 1263. F. 23 Nov.; at Soissons, simpl. 24 Nov. P. B.

Gottschalk (Godescale), prince (knes),

M.; he was a son of the Wendish Knes Uto and was educated as a Christian in S. Michael's monastery at Lüneburg. After the death of his father Uto, he renounced his faith and waged war against the Saxons; captured and released, he spent some time in Denmark and England, where he resumed the practice of his religion. Permitted to return, he united in one kingdom the Slav Obotrites, Wagrians, and Polabes, the Christianizing of which he carried out by the aid of German priests; he accompanied these priests from place to place, serving as interpreter. He founded monasteries at Aldenburg, Mecklenburg, Lübeck, Lenzen, and Ratzeburg. He fell a victim to a powerful pagan reaction at Lenzen on the Elbe, diocese of Havelberg, 14 June, 1066. The priest Ebbo was killed with him whilst standing at the altar; at the same time, Ss. Ansuerus and companions were martyred at Ratzeburg. F. 7 June (Cologne Brev. 1515).—H. L.—Grot.

Gregory II, the Younger, C., Pope 19 May 715–31; b. at Rome; under Sergius I, he was archdeacon and distinguished himself as companion of Pope Constantine at Constantinople (709–11) during the negotiations over the Trullan Synod. During his pontificate he showed prudence and strength in every sphere, especially in the conflict with the Lombards, whose progress he stopped; also in his attitude toward the Byzantine Emperor, Leo III, whose political dignity he maintained, whilst he firmly opposed his iconoclastic tendencies at a Roman synod, in 729; also in his transactions with the British and Irish (about the paschal cycle) and the Germans (Duke Theodo of Bavaria and

S. Boniface, whom he consecrated and sent to Germany). He made special efforts to spread the Order of S. Benedict; in 720, he restored Monte Cassino and built monastic houses in connection with S. Paul's and S. Maria Maggiore. D. 11 Feb., 731, and is buried in S. Peter's. F. 13 Feb. Rom. Mart. dp. at Rome, O. S. B. and at Fulda.—C. E.—W.W.—Biogr.

Gregory I, the Great, C., Pope, and Doctor of the Church; one of the most commanding figures in ecclesiastical history; b. at Rome, in 540, a scion of the house of the Anicii. His father's name was Gordianus; his mother Silvia is venerated as a Saint. About 571, he was prefect of Rome. After his father's death he erected six monasteries in Sicily; his father's mansion at Rome he converted into a Benedictine monastery (S. Andrea in Monte Celio), where he himself took the habit, in 575, relinquishing his prospects of a brilliant worldly career. He was appointed archdeacon of the Roman Church and, in 579, apocrisiary or Papal Legate to Constantinople, where he remained for nearly seven years. Active for both Church and

State. In 585, he returned to Rome, was elected abbot of S. Andrea and secretary of Pelagius II in adjusting the Istrian schism. After Pelagius II had died of the bubonic plague (5 Feb., 590), Gregory was elected pope; he held a great procession to obtain the cessation of the pestilence; to escape consecration, he fled from Rome in disguise, but was brought back and crowned, 3 Sept. Into the 14 years of his pontificate Gregory, in spite of ill health, crowded work enough to have exhausted the energies of a lifetime. "He never rested," writes Paul the Deacon. He regulated the stations still noted in the Roman Missal; his sermons and homilies held at these Stations are popular explanations of S. Scripture; he gave a set form to some parts of the Mass and to ecclesiastical chants. He was unrelenting in warning against simony, heresy (Donatism, Manicheism, Arianism) and paganism, as is proved by his voluminous correspondence with Spain, Gaul, Ireland, and the Eastern patriarchates; he energetically promoted monasticism, especially his own (the Benedictine) Order. To practice charity, to alleviate the lot of peasants and slaves, he gave special attention to a solid administration of the patrimony of S. Peter. He conciliated the Lombards, restrained the Byzantine Emperors and strenuously upheld the rights of the Holy See against the pretensions of the patriarchs of Constantinople. In Gaul he opened the way for the liberty of the Church; to England he sent S. Augustine with forty missionaries; in Spain, through S. Leander, he overcame Arianism amongst the Visigoths (King Recared); in Africa he restored ecclesiastical discipline and extinguished Donatism. His pontificate was full of light in an age of storm and darkness. D. 11 March (buried 12 March), 604. F. 12 March, Rom. Mart.; dp. in the Latin Church and full office in the Greek Church. His relics are in the Clementine chapel of S. Peter's, Rome. Part of his relics (if genuine) were brought (by theft) to S. Medard, Soissons, in 829, with those of S. Sebastian. Gregory Nazianzen, the "Theologian," Bp., C., and Doctor of the Church. He was a native of Arianzus in Cappadocia, Asia Minor; b. about 325, as a son of S. Gregory Nazianzen the Elder and S. Nonna, brother of S. Caesarius and S. Gorgonia. He studied first at Caesarea in Cappadocia, where he had for a fellow-student St. Basil the Great, his compatriot, with whom he contracted an intimate friendship. He finished his studies at Caesarea in Palestine, Alexandria, and Athens, the fourth-century centers of learning. In accordance with the imperfect Church discipline of his age he was not baptized until he returned from Athens to his father's house. Then desiring to lead a perfect life, he joined St. Basil in his hermitage in a secluded spot on the Black Sea, in Pontus. He was, however, recalled by his father and ordained by him on Christmas Day, 361; his first sermon he preached on Easter, 362. Eleven years later St. Basil, then his metropolitan, consecrated Gregory bishop of Sasima, a mere village; but to the great mortification of S. Basil Gregory abandoned his diocese; later on he was induced to act as coadjutor to his father. When his father died, Gregory, to hide himself, fled to the monastery of Seleucia (375). The troubled Church of Constantinople was to be his chief field of work. Some time after the death of S. Basil (379) the persecuted Catholics of Constantinople demanded Gregory for their pastor. He consented, though with reluctance. He began his mission in a private house (379). When, however, Emperor Theodosius the Great was baptized, in 380, he deposed and exiled the Arian bishop Demophilus and made Gregory archbishop of Constantinople. The election was approved by the ecumenical council of Constantinople (381). But S. Gregory, disillusioned and discouraged, resigned after one month and withdrew, first to Nazianzus, where he undertook the administration of the diocese, then to his native town, Arianzus, where he died, about 389. He was a gentle, fastidious, retiring, timorous, peace-loving soul. Liable to despondency and irritability, he lacked the heroic spirit of his friend Basil. Much against his inclination, however, with the effective assistance of the Emperor, he reestablished the orthodox faith in the very stronghold of the militant heresy of Arius. His reputation as an orator and a theologian merited for him the title "Theologus," which he shares in the Greek Church with S. John the Evangelist. His works, in poetry and prose, are voluminous and, apart from their theological significance, show that he was a literary genius of the first order. In the 9th century his relics were brought from Constantinople to Rome, and, from his own little church to the basilica of St. Peter by Gregory XIII, in 1564. They are now in the chapel of Our Lady of Help. His name is mentioned daily in the Oriental liturgies (Greek and Coptic). F. 9 May (Tr. rel. to Rome) and 11 June (Tr. rel. to St. Peter's), Rom. Gregory VII (Hildebrand), C., O. S. B., Pope 1073–1085; one of the most remarkable men of all times. B. in 1020, at Sovana in Tuscany, of lowly parents. He was educated at Rome in the monastery of S. Mary on the Aventine Hill, where his uncle was abbot; there he also took the habit of S. Benedict. He was chaplain to Pope Gregory VI (John Gratian), but, in 1047, seeking a more perfect school of monastic devotion, retired to Cluny, at a time when the Papacy had fallen to the lowest depths of degradation. With S. Leo IX, in 1049, he returned to Rome and was appointed administrator of the patrimony of S. Peter. In 1050, he was prior of S. Paul's outside the Walls; in 1055 papal delegate to France against the heresy of Berengar and existing simonistic abuses; in 1057, he was sent as legate to Germany, and, in 1059, appointed archdeacon of the Roman Church. He was the most influential man under five pontificates: Pope after Pope disappeared, Hildebrand alone stood firm. On April 22, 1073, he was elected to fill the See of S. Peter. He firmly carried out his reform decrees against the three great evils of his age: incontinency of the clergy, simonistic practices, and lay investiture; at the Roman synods of 1074 and 1075 simony and concubinage of the clergy, and, in 1075, lay investiture were strictly prohibited. The guilty clerics revolted under Cencius, Christmas, 1075; Henry IV refused obedience and "deposed" Gregory at a synod at Worms, 24 Jan., 1076. The Pope excommunicated Henry, who, in October, was deposed by the German lords at Tribur. In spite of the penance done of his own free will at Canossa (Jan. 1077), Henry did not reform, but when Gregory gave the crown of the Empire to Rudolf of Suabia, Henry set up an Antipope (Clement III) and laid siege to Rome. Released from the castle of S. Angelo by the Norman, Robert Guiscard, Gregory escaped to Salerno, where he died, 25 May, 1085, and was buried in the cathedral. From first to last Gregory was governed, not by arrogant ambition, but by zeal for the glory of God and the purification of the Church. His life story is the history of his warfare against the encroachments of imperial power upon spiritualities. To him the only means for effecting this purpose was the complete emancipation of the Church from the fatal subserviency into which it had been brought by the well-intentioned but dangerous precedents adopted by Henry III. G. was canonized in 1606. F. 25 May, Rom. Mart. (since 1584); office granted to Salerno in 1609, to the province of Siena in 1610; to the Benedictines in 1719; to the universal Latin Church by Benedict XIII; dp. 2 cl. Gregory, M., at Messina; v. S. Nicander, 25 Sept.

Gregory the Illuminator (Lusarovitsh), Bp., M., Apostle of Armenia; b. about 240, son of Anak, the murderer of King Chosrov I of Armenia. When a baby, he was taken to Cappadocia, where he was raised as a Christian and married. He had two sons, S. Aristaghes and Verthanes. Having lived in solitude for a while, he returned to Armenia and attached himself to King Tiridat, Chosrov's son, to expiate the crime of his father. When he refused to sacrifice to Anahid, his identity was discovered, and after the most barbarous tortures he was sentenced to die of hunger in the pit of Artashat, in which he was miraculously kept alive for 13 years. After the martyrdom of S. Rhipsime he delivered Tiridat of diabolical possession: the king and his nobles were baptized and Christianity, by an edict, became the national religion. Gregory was sent to Leontius of Caesarea (295) to be consecrated bishop. As such he organized the Armenian Church, assisted by Greek and Syriac missionaries.

To the place from which the title of his see is taken he gave the name of Etchmiadzin, "Descent of the Only Begotten," in commemoration of a manifestation of Our Lord. The city is now called Vallarshabad. His Life, purporting to be written by Agathangelos, the secretary of Tiridat, is a tissue of fables. Historical facts are: his descent, his missionary activity, his consecration at Caesarea, a miracle wrought in favor of the king, and the destruction of the pagan temples. In his old age Gregory lived in retirement on Mt. Manyea; his son Aris-taghes was consecrated bishop of the Armenians. S. Gregory died in his solitude, unknown to men, about 332. The patriarchate for several generations remained in possession of his descendants. The Armenians have many feasts in his honor: his Torments, 4 Feb.; his Entry into the Pit, 28 Feb.; his Egress from the Pit, 19 Oct.; his Vision, 30 Oct.; the Invention of his Relics, 18 Nov.; his Death, 30 Sept. He preached in the national language and used it for the liturgy and gave to the Armenian Church the marked national character it still has. F. 30 Sept. Rom. Mart., full office in the Greek Church. * Grēgōry Palamas, C., Bp. of Thessalonica, pseudomystic and champion of the Palamites or Hesychasts; b. at Constantinople, in 1296; he took the habit of S. Basil on Mt. Athos, in 1318; he began to teach his quietistic doctrines about 1330, was excommunicated in 1345, but rehabilitated in 1348; d. in 1359 and was declared a saint by a synod at Constantinople, in 1868. F. 14 Nov.—Mz.

Gregory the Wonder Worker, C., Bp. of Neocaesarea in Pontus; b. about 213 of noble pagan parents at Neocaesarea; he and his brother Athenodorus studied law. On their way to Berytus, they were detained at Caesarea in Palestine by Origen, who baptized them. After their return (238), Gregory was consecrated bishop of Neocaesarea (240), which was still pagan; he converted the inhabitants by his word and example. At his accession there were no more than seventeen Christians in the town; and it is related that on his deathbed he thanked God that only that number of idolaters remained in it. In 264, he took part in the synod of Antioch against Paul of Samosata. D. about 270. Because of the great number of miracles he wrought, he is called Wonder Worker (Thaumaturgus); his miraculous power is undoubted, but some of his miracles, e.g., moving a mountain by prayer, are open to criticism. Parts of his relics are at S. Peter's in the Vatican, his head (1587) at Lisbon; his body is said to have been transferred by angels to the Basilian monastery of Coscia di Staletti, diocese of Squillace, in Calabria; since then, the Calabrians claim, the dangerous storms of the bay of Squillace have ceased. He is patron in desperate situations and against inundations. F. 17 Nov. Rom. Mart.; sem. in the Latin Church (since 16th century); in the Greek Church, full office. At Staletti (principal patron) dp. 1 cl. oct.; 5 Feb. F. of his Patronage. He is minor patron of Reggio, Messina, and Palermo (against earthquakes).—Leg. St. 130.—H. L.—C. E.—W.W.—Syn., 130.—Rams.—Biogr.

Gregory of Tours, Bp., C.; b. of a senatorial family at Clermont-Ferrand, Auvergne, 30 Nov., 538, he was educated by his uncle, S. Gall, bishop of Clermont, and by S. Avitus; in 573, he was elected bishop of Tours and, as such, became one of the most influential men of the Merovingian realm; he built a new basilica over the tomb of S. Martin; d. 17 Nov., 594. Gregory wrote a History of the Franks in ten books; eight books of miracles (very uncritical), and a number of books on the lives and miracles of the Saints. F. 17 Nov., Rom. Mart.; dp. at Tours.—P. B.—Biogr.

Gregory the Decapolite, Bp., C.; b. at Irenopolis in the Isaurian Decapolis; he was a monk, then a bishop, and lastly by divine inspiration, became a pilgrim; he went to Syracuse, Rome, Thessalonica, etc.; under Leo the Isaurian he arrived at Constantinople and defended the cult of images. He sent his disciple, S. Joseph the Hymnographer, to Rome in the cause of orthodoxy; d. 20 Nov., 817. F. 20 Nov., Rom. Mart.; full office in the Greek Church; in the Syrian Church, 2 cl.—H. L.

Gregory II, "the Theologian," C., Bp. of Girgenti in Sicily; b. at Praetoria, near Girgenti, in 559; educated by S. Potamion, bishop of Girgenti. On a pilgrimage to Jerusalem he was ordained deacon; arriving at Rome, he was consecrated bishop of Girgenti (590). He was calumniated at Rome, but justified himself before Gregory the Great, in 591. In 594, he was restored to his see; d. about 638. F. 23 Nov., Rom. Mart.; at Girgenti (principal patron) dp. 1 cl. oct.; in the Greek Church full office.—H. L.

Gregory, M., at Constantinople; v. S. Basil, 28 Nov.

Gregory III, C., Pope, 18 March 731–41. He was a Syrian, eloquent, learned, and active; he strove in all things to follow the policy of his predecessor, S. Gregory II. His election was the last for which the Emperor's leave was asked, the practice of doing so having lasted for nearly fifty years. At a synod (732) he condemned the iconoclast heresy and excommunicated its adherents (Emperor Leo the Isaurian). Pressed hard by the Lombard King Liutprant, he resolved to place the Apostolic See under the protectorate of the Franks, but Charles Martel, who had just overthrown the Saracen invaders of Western Europe, refused military intervention. He nominated S. Boniface archbishop of Mayence and induced him to organize the Church of Bavaria and Alemannia (738–39.) After a stormy pontificate he died 10 Dec., 741. F. 28 Nov., Rom. Mart. dp. at Rome.—C. E.—W.W.—Rams.—Biogr.

Gregory, Bp., M., son of S. Verthanes; by his grandfather S. Gregory the Illuminator he was appointed bishop of the Albanians in Armenia (at the age of 16 years); the pagan Massagetes killed him, by tying him to a horse's tail at Phaitakaran, about 335. F. 1 Dec., in Armenia. He is mentioned daily in the diptychs of the Armenian Mass.—Nill., II, 586, 607.—Web., 275.

 Gregory of Kaskhar, Nestorian metropolitan of Nisibis in Mesopotamia after 596. He was exiled to the monastery of S. Shadost, but was permitted to return at the demand of the bishops. He is venerated as a martyr, although he died a natural death, about 610.—Buch.

Gregory X (B.), C., Pope, 1 Sept. 1271–76; b. at Piacenza, in 1210. His secular name was Theobald Visconti; he had been archdeacon at Liège, and charged with the preaching of the last Crusade, when, after an interregnum of three years, he was elected pope at Viterbo, by compromise, though he was not a cardinal nor even a priest, and absent with Prince Edward in the Holy Land. He was consecrated at Rome, 27 March, 1272. With all his energy he plunged into the task of restoring peace, settling the affairs of the German Empire, reforming the discipline of the Church, effecting the union of the Greek Church with Rome, and delivering the Holy Land from the Saracen yoke. He assembled the 14th General Council at Lyons, to put an end to the Greek schism and raised an army of crusaders. He failed in both: the union with Constantinople was a mere political act, not strong enough to last. But he put an end to the interregnum in Germany by approving the election of Rudolf of Hapsburg; d. on the return journey from Lyons to Rome, at Arezzo, 10 Jan., 1276. Cult approved by Benedict XIV. F. at Lyons, 28 Jan.; at Rome, dp. 4 Feb.; at Arezzo 19 Jan. dp. maj.—Biogr.—C. E.—W.W.

Gregory of Cerchiara (B.), C., O. S. B., founder and first abbot of Burtseheid; b. of a noble family in Calabria (he was not a son of Emperor Phocas); called by Otto III, he went to Germany and, with the assistance of the Emperor, built Burtseheid monastery about 997; d. 6 Feb., 1000, glorified by miracles. Cult not approved.—H. L.

Guardian Angels. It is the mind of the Church that every individual soul has a guardian angel. St. Thomas (S. Th., Ia, qu. 113 ad 4) teaches that they alone are our guardians. The first request for permission to have a feast in honor of the guardian angels came to the S. R. C., in 1579, from Cordova, Spain, and at Cordova the feast of the tutelary angel of the city is celebrated on May 10 dp. maj. Shortly after Cordova, Toledo and Valencia obtained a similar privilege for the 1 March. Paul V, 27 Sept., 1608, placed the feast amongst the feasts of the general calendar, for the first free day within the octave of S. Michael, i. e., Oct. 2. By a concession of June 30, 1667, for the German Empire the feast was transferred to the first Sunday in September. The Spaniards and Portuguese of Europe and America, besides the universal feast of the Guardian Angel, before the reform of 1913 and 1914 kept a feast of the tutelary spirits of Spain, Portugal, and the republics of the Western hemisphere. (v. Guardian Angel of France, etc.)

After six children had been born to them, they made a solemn vow of continency. S. Hedwig's influence upon the civilization and Germanization of Silesia was very strong; she introduced the Augustinians, Dominicans, Franciscans, Premonstratensians, Templars, and Cistercians to take up work there; her principal foundation was the Cistercian nunnery at Trebnitz, to which, after her husband's death, she retired, without, however, taking the veil, and led a life of peculiar austerity; d. at Trebnitz, 15 Oct., 1243. She was canonized, 15 Oct., 1267. F. 15 Oct., Rom Mart.; in the Latin Church, 17 Oct.; in Silesia (principal patroness), 15 Oct. dp. 1 cl. Oct.; in Poland

Helen, V., M. = S. Alena of Forêt, Brabant. 16 June.

Helen (Elin) of Skoefde, M. She was probably a daughter of the Swedish Duke Guthorm; after her husband's death she undertook a pilgrimage to Jerusalem. In the final struggles of heathenism against advancing Christianity in Scandinavia, she was barbarously put to death. Whilst on her road to the church of Skoefde, she was attacked by assassins, sent by the kinsmen of her murdered son-in-law, to avenge his death on her, in 1160. She was buried in the church of Skoefde; was canonized by Archbishop Stephen of Upsala (authorized by Pope Alexander III), in 1164. F. 31 July in Sweden, dp.—H. L.—Rams.—P. B.

Helen, Matron, Empress, mother of Constantine the Great (274); b. about 250, at Drepanum in Bithynia (Asia Minor), of low condition. She was an innkeeper in her home town; she became the wife of Constantine Chlorus in morganatic but valid wedlock. In 292, Constantius repudiated her for political reasons. When, after the death of Constantius, Constantine became Caesar, he sent for his mother and invited her to Treves. It was between 306 and 313 that Helen must have lived at Treves; she was not, at that time, a Christian, nor did she believe till after the conversion of her son, as may be gathered from Eusebius. Constantine induced his mother to become a Christian, in 313. Given to piety and works of charity, St. Helen mostly lived in the Sessorian palace at Rome; she founded and endowed many churches in the Holy Land, at Rome, etc., but hardly at Treves or Cologne. To expiate the crimes where-with her son was stained, the aged Helen, in 325, went to Jerusalem to visit the places made sacred by the footsteps of the Saviour. That S. Helen dug on Calvary and found the true Cross is a matter of tradition dating from the time of St. Ambrose, but it was unknown to Eusebius, who was a contemporary. The bodies of the Three Magi, now shown at Cologne, are said to have been brought by S. Helen from the East and given to the Church of Milan; she is also said to have given the Holy Coat, the seamless robe of Christ, to the Church of Treves. D. about 330, at Helenopolis (Drepanum), and was buried in the church of the Apostles at Constantinople. But this is not certain. The Roman tradition contends that she died near Rome and was buried there; her tomb is venerated in the church of S. Maria in Ara Coeli. In 849, her remains were brought to Hautevilliers, diocese of Reims. She is patroness of dyers, needlers, and nailsmiths. F. 18 Aug. Rom. Mart. At Treves, where she is confounded with the British Helen, the wife of the usurper Maximus (Maxen Wledig), dp. 2 cl.; at the end of the Middle Ages her feast was kept in many churches Feb. 8. By the reform of 1913 her name was stricken from many calendars; her feast is still celebrated at Treves, Jerusalem, Cologne, Orléans, Verona, by the Passionists, the Fathers of the Holy Cross, at St. John of the Lateran, S. M. in Ara Coeli. In the Greek and Syrian Churches: F. 21 May, full office with her son, the Emperor Constantine; in the Coptic Church, 24 March and 4 May.—L. S.—W.W.—C. E. Tam. 97.—R. Sott., 545.—F. J.

Helen, V., M., at Siaria; v. S. Centolla, 13 Aug.

Helen, Matron, Empress, daughter of Eudaf (Octavius, a Welsh prince), and wife of the Spaniard Maximus (Maxen Wledig), who was raised to the Roman purple by the legions in Britain, in 383. For a time she resided at Treves with Maximus; it was this Helen, not the mother of Constantine, who gave the palace at Treves to the Church. Her brother was Cynan Meiriadog, a ruler of North Wales, who with an army of native Cymri followed Maximus to Gaul and Italy, never to return. To her (not to the mother of Constantine) are dedicated several churches in Wales and Cornwall. Her son, Owen Finddu, made Britain independent. F. 25 Aug.—B. G., III, 255.

Helpers in Need, or Holy Helpers. A group of fourteen saints, invoked by those in need, sickness, or danger. Their names are: Achatius (22 June, the leader of the 10,000 Mm. crucified at Mt. Ararat); Blaise, Bp., M. (3 Febr.); Christopher, (M. 25 July); Cyriacus, M., of Rome (8 Aug.); Denis, of Paris, Bp., M. (9 Oct.); Erasmus, Bp., M. (2 June); Eustachius, of Rome, M. (20 Sept.); George of Lydda, M. (23 April); Giles, abbot (Aegydius, 1 Sept.); Pantaleon, of Nicomedia, M. (27 July); Vitus, M. (15 June); Barbara, of Heliopolis, V., M. (4 Dec.); Catherine, V., M. (25 Nov.); and Margaret, V., M. (20 July). For local reasons there are sometimes added: Magnus, of Füssen (6 Oct.); Magnus, of Altino (Oderzo, Bp., C., 6 Oct.); Leonard, abbot (6 Nov.); Nicholas, of Myra, Bp., C. (6 Dec.); Oswald, king of England, M. (5 Aug.); Quirinus, M. (30 March); Rochus, C. (16 Aug.); Sebastian, M. (20 Jan.); and Dorothea, V., M. (6 Febr.). The essential requisite for reception into the group was the power to help men in need, guaranteed by a divine promise made to the saint during his martyrdom or shortly before death. During the Middle Ages their cult was unknown at Rome; there are indications that the group was formed in central Germany, in the country around the upper Main, during the great pestilence and the social disturbances of the 14th century. The cult spread all over Germany after the apparitions at Frankenthal, in 1445 and 1446. German emigrants and soldiers carried it into Bohemia, Moravia, Galicia, Hungary, Italy, and America. In France, 15 "adjutores" are venerated, including the Blessed Virgin Mary. Formu-laries of Masses in honor of the 14 Helpers are found in Missals of the 15th and 16th centuries, but were abolished by Pius V. A feast was kept in their honor at Halberstadt on Nov. 14; at Hildesheim and Hamburg, on Aug. 8. At present the feast is kept at Altdorf and at Frankenthal, in Bavaria, on the 4th Sunday after Easter, at Gonsenheim, diocese of Mayence, on the 3d Sunday after Pentecost.—Buch.—Franz, Messe.

Henry, "the Good," C. (Henry Michael Pusche, "der Gute Heinrich"); b. end of the 16th cent. at Arlon in Belgic Luxembourg; he was a shoemaker and founded the confraternity of Ss. Crispinus and Crispinianus (Frères Cordonniers) first at Arlon, in 1625 also at Paris. His example was imitated all over France and other countries; d. at Paris, of pneumonia, 9 June, 1666.—P. B.

Henry, M., a boy, killed at Weissenburg (Rhenish Bavaria) by Jews, in 1270. F. 29 June.—H. L.

Henry II, German King and Roman Emperor, C.; b. at Abbach castle on the Danube in Lower Bavaria, 6 May, 973; he was the last German king of the Saxon house, the son of Duke Henry the Wrangler of Bavaria. Destined in youth for the priesthood, he became acquainted with ecclesiastical interests. In 1002, he was elected emperor, on the death of Otto III. He firmly insisted on the reform of monasteries, but favored the bishops, whom he mostly took from his chancery (e. g., S. Meinwerk). As his marriage with S. Kunegundis remained without offspring, he used his possessions to endow the see of Bamberg (1007); he also restored the see of Merseburg (1004), was crowned king of Italy in 1004, and received the Roman crown from Benedict VIII; in 1020, he confirmed this Pope in the possession of the patrimony of S. Peter. He built the cathedral, St. Stephen's church, and Michaelsberg abbey at Bamberg, the cathedral of Bâle and other churches. He fostered the commerce of his country, giving privileges and charters to the cities, and overawing the arrogant feudal barons. His justice tempered with mercy made him universally popular. Though zealous in the performance of his religious duties, he autocratically disposed of bishoprics and abbeys. D. at Grona near Göttingen, 13 July, 1024, and was buried in the cathedral of Bamberg. That he led a virginal life with S. Kunegundis, is denied by many historians. He was lamed by a fall from his horse, not by an angel. F. 14 and 15 July, Rom. Mart.; in the Latin Church: 1613 simpl. 13 July; 1668 sem. 15 July; at Bamberg (Princ. Patr.) dp. 1 cl. oct. 13 July; F. of his Canonization (12 March 1152) 14 March simpl.; at Goslar formerly 5 Oct., solemn.—W.W.—L. S.—P. B.—Biogr.

Henry Seuse (Suso, Suess), (B.) called "Amandus." C., O. P., German mystic; b. at Constance (not at Ueberlingen), 21 March, about 1295, of the noble family of Berg; Seuse was the name of his mother. He joined the Dominican Order at Cologne and finished his studies (1324-27) under Eckhart, then returned to Constance; in 1343, he was prior at Diessenhofen; in 1343, he was sent from Constance to Ulm, where he died, 25 Jan., 1366. His life as a mystic began in 1313; he made himself the "Servant of Eternal Wisdom," had frequent visions and ecstasies, practiced severe austerities, and bore afflictions and calumnies with great patience. He influenced especially the Dominican nuns at Katharinental and Töss, famous nurseries of mysticism in the 13th and 14th century. He was esteemed as a preacher, his apostolate, however, was not with the masses, but rather with individuals of all classes, to whom he became a personal director in the spiritual life. His "Booklet of Eternal Wisdom" (1328) is the most exquisite fruit of German mysticism, as he himself is its most amiable representative. His cult was approved in 1831. F. 2 March dp. O. P., and in the diocese of Freiburg i. B.; in the diocese of Rottenburg, 28 Jan.—Seeb. 88.—P. B.—H. L.—W.W.—Dom. 58.

Columban at Fontenelle (674) and was ordained priest. He introduced the rule of Fontenelle into the monastery on Aindre island, diocese of Nantes, of which he was made abbot; having spent his last years in solitude, he died on Indrette island, 25 March, 720. His relics were brought to Loches castle, about 875. In Brittany he is patron of cows. F. at Nantes 27 Nov. (formerly 25 Nov.) dp.—P. B.—Mg.

Hermelina, Laetissima, Felicia, Germana, and Evanthis, Vv., Mm., at Nicomedia. F. 27 Apr.—Mz.

Hermelina = S. Germelina.

Hermellus (Hermylus), M., at Constantinople. F. 3 Aug. Rom. Mart.; unknown to the Greeks.

Hermenegild, M., regent of Andalusia. He was the son of the Arian Visigoth King Leovigild and, with his brother, Recared, was made co-regent, in 573; educated an Arian; in 579, he married Ingundis, daughter of Sigebert, king of Austrasia; this princess, aided by S. Leander, succeeded in converting Hermenegild to the true faith (580). When his father threatened to despoil him of his authority, Hermenegild, supported by a powerful Catholic party and the Greeks, revolted against Leovigild, but, betrayed by the Greeks, was taken prisoner at Osseto, brought in chains to Toledo (583), from there to Valencia, and beheaded in prison at Italica (near Seville) during Easter night, for refusing to receive Communion from the hands of an Arian bishop. His rebellion against his own father is inexcusable, but he expiated it by his sufferings and death for the doctrine that Christ is true God and true man. His brother Recared succeeded on the Visigothic throne, and his conversion brought about the return of the nation to belief in the Blessed Trinity. The relics of S. Hermenegild are at Seville. F. 13 Apr. Rom. Mart.; in the Latin Church (since 1585) sem.; in Spain dp.; at Seville dp. 2 cl. in the Greek and Russian Churches, 1 Nov.—P. B.—H. L.

Hermenegild (B.), a Spanish monk at Salceda, diocese of Tuy; d. in 953. F. 5 Nov.—H. L.

Hermenfrid, C., Bp. of Verdun. According to his unreliable legend he had been a courtier of Childbert of Austrasia and companion-in-arms of Thierry, king of Burgundy, but left the world to take the Columban habit at Luxeuil; d. in 621. F. 8 Feb.—P. B.—Mg.

Hermengaud (Ermengaud, Armengol), C., Bp. of Urgel, a small mountain town in Catalonia; b. towards the end of the 10th century, son of the viscount of Conflans; he was archdeacon of the cathedral and, in 1010, succeeded Bishop Salla in the see of Urgel; he built a cathedral, the canons of which he bound to a regular life; he took Guisona from the Saracens; d. 3 Nov., 1035, whilst working at the construction of a bridge. He is patron against thunder storms, drouth, and inundations. F. 3 Nov. (principal patron) dp. 1 cl. oct. in the diocese of Urgel.—P. B.—Off. pr.—Mg.—H. L.

Hermentarius, M., Bp. of Puy; 14 Nov.—P. B.

Hermes, M.; v. S. Primianus, 1 Jan.

Hermes and Solutor, Mm., in Africa. F. 21 Jan.—H. L.

Hermes (exorcist), Aggaeus, and Cajus, Mm., under Diocletian at Bononia on the Danube (Widdin in Bulgaria). F. 4 Jan.; at Bologna in Italy, formerly dp. 28 Jan., because the Italian city of Bononia erroneously claimed these martyrs (the feast was abolished at Bologna in 1914). At Ratiaria (Ressana) they had a feast 31 Dec.; at Adrianople, 22 Oct.; at Ravenna 24 Jan. Rom. Mart., 31 Dec. The names Aggaeus and Cajus are doubtful; perhaps they do not belong to Bononia-Widdin but to some other town.—H. L.—Thr. M., 257.

Hermes (Hermas), C., brother of Pope Pius I; he composed the ancient devotional book entitled "Pastor." His treatise on the Easter question is lost. F. 1 March.—Buch.—W.W.

Hermes, disciple (or teacher?) of the Forty Martyrs. F. 8 March.—Rb. Sl.

Hermes, disciple of the Apostles, bishop of Berytus or of some town in Dalmatia (Salona?). F. 8 Apr. (with Herodion, Agabus, Rufus, Phelegon, and Asyncritus), full office in the Greek Church. Not identical with Hermas of Philippi. Hermes was a common name amongst slaves.—Scherma, 336.

Hermes, Hadrianus, Victurus, Secundilla, Massilus, Januarius, Felix, Gittheus, Eunuclus, and 24 companions, Mm., at Massylis (Maxula) in Numidia. S. Augustine preached a sermon in their honor. F. 9 Apr., Rom. Mart. An ignorant copyist substituted "Massilia" for "Massylis" and transplanted these saints from Numidia to Marseilles, France. (1 March, Hier. Mart.) at Marseilles, dp. 9 Apr.—P. B.

Hermes, a decurion of Heraclea on the Propontis (Marmora); after a long trial and seven months' incarceration, he was brought to Adrianople with Bishop S. Philip and the priest Severus, and burnt alive, 22 Aug. (or 22 Oct.), 304. He is buried at Megystyron. F. 22 Aug., Rom. Mart.—H. L.

Hermes, M., at Ostia; v. S. Aurea, 24 Aug. and S. Censurinus, 23 Aug.

Hermes, M., at Capua; v. S. Rufina, 5 Aug.

Hermes, M., at Rome, said to have been executed under Hadrian with Pope Alexander I and companions, in 116; probably he was a rich freedman, certainly not prefect of Rome. A catacomb (ad Coemeterium Basilae), with a large subterranean basilica in the Old Salarian Way, bears his name. In the 5th century he had a church at Antium (Del. Orig., 311). Some of his relics were brought to Acquapendente, others to Salzburg (851), Cornelimünster (851), S. Marco, Rome (829), and to Seligenstadt (830). F. 28 Aug. (ancient) Rom. Mart.; simpl. in the Latin Church; at Acquapendente (principal patron) dp. 1 cl. oct. Formerly Tr. rel. at Salzburg 1 July, at Cornelimünster 10 Jan., at Rothnach 6 July.—Jnt. Rom., 90.—H. L.—R. Sott. 535.

Hermogenes and Menas, Greek Mm. F. 24 Jan.—MGR.

Hermogenes, M., at Antioch; v. S. Paetrus, 17 Apr.

Hermogenes, M., at Salona; v. S. Septimus, 18 Apr.

Hermogenes and Dionysius, reputed Mm., 18 Apr. Hermogenes probably belongs to Melitene, 19 Apr., Dionysius to some other group of martyrs.—H. L.

Hermogenes, Cajus, Expeditus, Elpidius (?), Aristonicus, Rufus, and Galata, Mm., at Melitene in Armenia. They are unknown in the Orient. F. 19 Apr., Rom. Mart. The Bollandists add to the above names a jumble of other names: Mitinas, Arminius, Rufus, Hilarius, Aristonicus, Fortunatus, Cajus, Donatus, Mavilinus, which are partly doubles. Thus "Mitinas" stands for Melitene, "Arminia" for Armenia, Donatus belongs to Africa, etc. From this group is taken the martyr S. Expeditus who has become so popular in modern times (v. S. Expeditus, 19 Apr.)—Achel. 134.—Chev.—Comm.

Hermogenes, disciple of the Apostles (II Tim. I, 15), bishop of Megara; Hermogenes and Demas are considered heretics. F. with that of Rufus 19 Apr. in the Syrian Mart. of 412. Scherm., 336. This Rufus and Hermogenes probably are not disciples of the Apostles, but the well known martyrs of Melitene.—Buch.

Hermogenes, M., at Melitene; v. S. Eppeus, 27 Apr.

Hermogenes and Evodius, brothers, with their sister Callista, Mm., at Syracuse (the Rom. Mart. has Callisti, 25 Apr., but Callistae, 2 Sept.). They were beheaded perhaps in the 3d century. Hermogenes, in apocryphal sources, is said to have accompanied the body of the Apostle S. James to Spain, and, on his voyage back to Palestine, to have been killed at Syracuse. F. 25 Apr. and 2 Sept., Rom. Mart.; 1 Sept., MGR.; at Syracuse, 14 May sem.—H. L.

Hermogenes, M., at Melitene, 3 (2) May; v. S. Elpidius.

Hermogenes, M., perhaps at Limenopolis in Persia ("in Luminata civitate"). F. 3 May.—H. L.

Hermogenes, a Greek M.; his teeth were pulled out. F. 24 July, Mrt.

Hermogenes and Fortunatus, Mm., under Diocletian, in 303. Fortunatus was a deacon of Cibalis near Sirmium in Upper Moesia; Hermogenes was a lector; they were beheaded at Cibalis; their acts appear to be genuine. F. 21 Aug.; at Udine 26 Aug. dp. Tr. rel. to Cividale in Friaul (10th century) 27 Aug.—H. L.

Hermogenes, M., at Nicomedia; v. S. Calista, 2 Sept.

Hermogenes, M., in Thrace; v. S. Edictus, 13 Nov.

Hermogenes, C., Bp. of Girgenti in Sicily; era and acts unknown. F. 24 Nov., MGr., Mz.; at Girgenti dp. (Lat.)—Off. pr. Agrig.

Hermogenes, M., in Africa; v. S. Zelotes, 6 Dec.

Hermogenes, M., at Alexandria; v. S. Menas or Eugraphus, 10 Dec.

Hermogenes, Donatus, and 22 companions, Mm., place and era unknown. Perhaps they are identical with the homonymous martyrs of Singidunum and Cibalis, 21 Aug. F. 12 Dec., Rom. Mart.

Hermogeras, M., at Aquileja; v. S. Fortunatus, 23 Aug.

Hermolaus, Bp., M., an apocryphal saint, who is said to have instructed and baptized S. Achatius and the 10,000 Martyrs in Armenia and was crucified with them. His skull is venerated in the church of S. Anna at Düren in Rhenania. F. 22 June. Gel.

Hermolaus, M., at Nicomedia, the priest who converted S. Pantaleon at Nicomedia; his brothers (?) were Hermippus (Anamaeus) and Hermocrates; they were beheaded in 305. Hermolaus with Pantaleon belongs to the Anargyri (silverless) class of Greek saints (who cured the sick gratis). F. 17 July Rom. Mart. In the Greek Church full office 26 July. In many dioceses of Southern Italy, dp. 30 July; at Benevento, dp. 7 Feb. (day of Tr. rel. to the cathedral a. 1697).—H. L.—MGr.

Hermolaus, priest, M. It seems, the Abyssinians, like the Greeks, connect a Hermolaus with their own Pantaleon (3 Oct.). F. 3 Oct.—Cal. Copt.

Hermon, M., a lector at Alexandria; v. S. Palamon, 18 May, and S. Serapion, 19 May.

Hermon, M., at Aquileja; v. S. Fortunatus, 23 Aug.

Hermylus and Stratonicus, Mm. Hermylus was deacon at Singidunum in Illyria, under Licinius, in 320; he was imprisoned, tortured, and drowned in the Danube, together with his jailer Stratonicus (he may have been his friend, not his jailer). Three days later, certain Christians charged with the care of the remains of martyrs, recovered their bodies and honorably interred them at some little distance from the city. Their relics are now at Singidunum, near Belgrade. Stratonicus had a church at Constantinople (2 June). F. 13 Jan., Rom. Mart. in Bosnia and Sirmium simpl.; in the Greek Church, full office (also 4 June).—Comm. Tr. M. 255.

Hermylus, a Greek M.; v. S. Phocas, 18 Dec.

Hernan = S. Ferdinand.

Herné = S. Ernaeus, hermit, 9 Aug.

Hernia (Hoiernin), hermit; he was b. in Britain and came to Brittany (Armorica) at the time of the Anglo-Saxon invasion; he led a solitary life at Duault near Carhaix, where he died, in 540. F. 2 Nov. (7 May, 15 Sept.)—B. G., III, 281.

Hero, M., at Alexandria; v. S. Heraclides, 28 June.

Herodas (Herodes), reputed disciple of the Apostles, martyred at Acco. F. in the Coptic Cal., 20 May.—Scher., 336.

Herodion (Rodion), one of the disciples of the Apostles (Rom. XVI, 14); b. at Tarsus; he was a kinsman of S. Paul and bishop of Novae Petrae (Patradgik); he accompanied S. Paul to Rome, where he was beheaded. Perhaps he was martyred (run through with a sword) at Novae Petrae (Neopatrae, Patradgik) in Thessaly. F. 8 Apr., Rom. Mart. Ss. Herodion, Asyneritus, and Phlegon. The Greeks give the full office to them, 8 Apr., adding Agapus, Rufus, and Hermes. In the MGr., Herodion 28 March and 10 Nov.—Scher., 336.—Comm.

* Herodion, abbot, C.; a disciple of S. Cornelius Komelski, founder of Ossad monastery on Lake Ilo, Russia; d. in 1541. F. 28 Sept., Mrt.—Mz.

Herus, M., Bp. of Antioch, second successor of S. Heron. F. 5 May, Old Syr. Mart.—Achel., 39.

Herveus (Huervé, Harvian, Hoernbiu), C. He was the son of a Welshman, Hyvarnion, a British minstrel at the court of King Childebert at Paris; the boy was raised in the profession of his father, and after the latter's death went through the villages of Brittany, singing, to procure a living for his mother, although he was blind from birth. At the age of fourteen he retired to the solitude of Lan-Ufoed and was ordained exorcist at Léon. Afterwards he went eastward and built a monastery at Lan-Quedre, but continued to travel about Brittany teaching and singing, and accompanying himself on the harp; d. 22 June, about 568. His relics were brought from Brest to the cathedral of Nantes, where they were scattered during the French Revolution. He is invoked for sore eyes and blindness. "Blind Huervé" is the hero of many popular Breton ballads. F. 17 June, dp. at Rennes and Quimper.—B. G., III, 270.

Herveus (B.), Treasurer of the Chapter of S. Martin's, Tours; he was a scion of the Busançais. His church and monastery, destroyed by fire, in 944, he rebuilt (dedicated, 4 July, 1014); he also constructed the monasteries of Eriagnol and Preuilly; d. in 1020, in a cell near Ecrignol. F. 16 Apr.—P. B.—Mg.

Herveus (B.), C., on Chalonne island,

Anjou; d. in 1130. St-Hervé, Chalonne, is called after him. F. 17 July.—P. B.—Mg.

*Herwadsh (Abu Rawachior), M.—S. Antony the Koraysite (Rouhay). F. 12 Dec.—Cal. Copt.

*Hesan Mawai ("victorious infant"), an Ethiopian saint. F. 18 July in the Abyssinian Church.—Cal. Copt.

Hescous (Iskaus), a Gothic M.; v. S. Bathusus, 26 March.

Hesperia (Hesteria), V., M., friend of S. Grata; she assisted in the conversion of the latter's parents, S. Lupus and S. Adleidis. Her story is very-doubtful. F. 11 Aug. at Bergamo.—H. L.

Hesperius, M., at Antioch; v. S. Sostratus, 8 June.

Hesperius (Sperus), 23d bishop of Metz; he was present at the synod of Clermont, in 535. His relics were found, 22 June, 1142, in the church of S. Clermont. F. at Metz simpl. 22 June.—H. L.

Hesperus (Exuperius), Zoe, and their children, Cyriacus and Theodulus; they were Phrygians, servants of a rich man, Catallus, at Attalia in Pamphilia; because they refused to sacrifice when a son was born to their master, they were thrown into a fiery furnace, under Emperor Hadrian. Parts of their relics were brought to Clermont. To S. Zoe a church was dedicated at Constantinople. F. 2 May, Rom. Mart.—MGr.—Mz.—Comm.

Hesteria = S. Hesperia, V., M.

Hesychius, Lucianus, Polyeuctus, Quadratus, Hosimus, Victor, Diognetes, Mamas, Phocas, Serius, Dimetius, Hadrianus, Thales, Jordanus, Anastades, Theolidus, Jacob, Theodoros, and two companions, Mm. (v. S. Sukias, 27 Aug.)

Hesychius ("the Prince"), M. F. 28 Feb. Cal. Copt. He probably is the saint of 18 Nov. (2 March).

Hesychius and Cyriacus, Mm. F. at Nicomedia, 1 March, Old Syr. Mart.—Achel., 39.

Hesychius (Isicius), "the Senator" (Palatine), M., under Maximinian. He was master of the palace at Antioch, but resigned, when Maximinian turned against the Christians; the tyrant had women's clothes put on him and ordered him to be drowned in the Orontes. F. 18 Nov., Rom. Mart.; full office in the Greek Church; also 10 March, MGr. Mz.—H. L.

Hesychius, "the Faster and Wonder-worker," C.; b. at Andrapena, near Ancyra; he lived in Bithynia, where he built a chapel and cell in honor of S. Andrew in the desert of Mt. Majo, near Adriana; he was renowned for his miracles and power over demons and animals. The day of his death was made known to him by an angel; d. about 790. His relics were brought to Amasia by Bishop Theophylactus, in 800. He is patron against diabolical possession. F. (8) 10 May, MGR. His name is daily commemorated in the diptycha of the Armenian Mass.—H. L.

Hesychius (Isicius, Ysice) I, Bp. of Vienne; he had been a senator and was the father of his successor, S. Avitus, and of Apollinaris of Vienne; d. about 490. F. 16 March and 12 Nov.—P. B.

Hesychius, C., a monk in the Syrian desert and priest at Jerusalem; d. in 434; he is celebrated by the Greeks as an exegete, but most of his writings are lost. F. 28 March, MGR.

Hesychius (Isicius, Hiscius), M., Bp. of Cazorla, province of Jaen, an alleged disciple of the Apostle S. James, sent to Spain by Ss. Peter and Paul, with six other bishops (v. S. Torquatus). He fixed his see at Cartela (Cazorla) on the headwaters of the Guadalquivir, where he is venerated as patron. F. 15 May, Rom. Mart., with Ss. Torquatus and companions; at Cazorla and at Tarifa (on the straits of Gibraltar), principal patron, dp. 1 cl. 1 March; at Cadiz and Granada dp.—H. L.—P. B.

Hesychius and companions, Mm., at Byzantium. Their story is unknown. F. 19 May, Old Syr. Mart.—Achel., 39.—Thr. M., 232.

Hesychius, M., at Antioch; 29 May, Old Syr. Mart.; perhaps he is identical with the well known M. of 2 March.

Hesychius (Isicius), M. at Dorostolum in Moesia, a soldier and friend of Ss. Julius, Pasicates, and Valentin; he suffered under Diocletian, in 303. F. 15 June, Rom. Mart.—Comm.—Quent., 264.—Thr. M., 270.

Hesychius and Serena, Mm., at Tarsus in Cilicia. F. 3 July.—Mrt.

Hesychius, M., at Durazzo; v. S. Peregrinus, 7 July.

Hesychius, M.; v. S. Diomedes, 2 Sept.

Hesychius, abbot, C., the most beloved disciple of S. Hilarion at Majuma near Gaza in Palestine; in 359, he accompanied him to Egypt and from Arian persecution fled with him to the great Oasis; he again found the fugitive Hilarion in Sicily and went with him, first to Epidauros, then to Cyprus: two years after S. Hilarion's death in 373, he took his body to Majuma; d. towards the end of the 4th century, after 373. F. 3 Oct., Rom. Mart. MGR. simpl. at Jerusalem.—H. L.—P. B.

Hesychius, "the Silent," a monk at Chozeba, near Jerusalem; he may be a differ-

Hesychius and companions. Mm. F. 27 Oct. = Suchiasite Mm.—Ter Israel.

Hesychius, M., at Melitene; v. S. Hieron 7 Nov.

Hesychius II, Bp. of Vienne; d. before 559; according to his epitaph he had been "quaestor regum," in 549, he was at the synod of Orléans; in 552 at the synod of Paris. F. 12 Nov. at Valence. Cult approved, 1 Dec., 1907.—P. B.

Hesychius, Pachomius (Pachynius), and Theodore, Egyptian bishops, imprisoned and decapitated under Maximin (311); whilst in prison, they energetically resisted the intruder Meletius, Bp. of Lycopolis. F. 26 Nov., Rom. Mart.—H. L.

Hesychius, Bp., nephew of S. Gregory Illuminator = S. Hussik, 1 Dec.

Hethum (Hayton) I, Armenian King of Cilicia, C., father of King Leo III, of Armenia; b. at Tarsus, in 1224; having been defeated by Bibars, in 1265, he abdicated, in 1268, and took the Premonstratensian habit under the name of Macarius; d. in Dec., 1271. Ter Israel commemorates him in his Menology on Oct. 25.—Chev.

* Hevara Bar Theodore, abbot of Banael and S. Acha, near Ninive; 6th century. F. 22 Nov., Rb. Sl.

Hia (Ives). V.; b. in Ireland; perhaps she was a disciple of S. Finbar; she came to Cornwall with S. Elwyn and led a solitary life near Havlemouth. F. at St. Ives, 3 Feb.; at Cambrone, 22 Oct.—B. G., III, 267.

Hidulf = Hydulph.

Hierax, of Iconium, M., at Rome; v. S. Justinus, 14 Apr.

Hierax and Dioscurus, ascetes in the Nitrian desert; they were exiled to Saina by the intruder George, the Arian patriarch of Alexandria, in 356. F. 21 May, Rom. Mart.—Comm.

Hierax, M., at Rome; v. S. Justinus, 1 June.

Hierax, Philip and 10 boys, Mm., at Alexandria. F. 15 June, Old Syr. Mart.—Achel., 39.

Hierax, M.; v. S. Nitas, or Terentius, 28 Oct.

Hieretha, V., abbess, who had a shrine at Chittlehampton, Devon; she may be identical with S. Herednat, daughter of King Cinnaught in the North of Ireland, who lived at Tulach Bennain in Limerick. F. 10 Apr.—O'H., IV, 92.

Hieria, widow of a Roman senator, converted by S. Febronia; d. in 320. She was buried beside the tomb of S. Febronia in Mesopotamia. F. 3 June.—H. L.

Hierias, M., at Syracuse, Sicily, companion of Ss. Rufinus and Marcia, 21 June.—P. B.

Hieron, Hesychius, Nicander, and 30 companions, Mm., under Diocletian. Hieron was born at Tyana in Cappadocia; he was a strong, well-built man, but refused to serve in the army, because he feared he would not be able to practice his religious duties there. He was imprisoned and had his right hand cut off. At last he was whipped and beheaded with 33 others at Melitene in Armenia. F. 7 Nov., Rom. Mart.; full office in the Greek and Syrian churches.—Nill. I, 463.—H. L.

Hieronides (error for "Chronides"), Leontius, Serapion, Selesius, Valerianus, and Straton, Mm., at Alexandria in Egypt. F. 12 Sept., Rom. Mart.; 13 Sept., MGr. These martyrs suffered at different places (v. S. Chronides, 13 Sept.). Chfonides, Leontius, and Serapion form one group from Alexandria; Selesius ought to read Seleucus; he was thrown to the beasts in Scythia; Valerianus belongs to the group: Zoticus, Lucianus, Valerianus, and Helus (Elei) at Tomi (Constantza): Straton, with S. Silvanus, suffered at Nicomedia.—Chev.—H. L.

Hieronyma, V., M. Her relics are in the cathedral of Teruel. F. 6 Sept. at Teruel (cath.)—O.

Hieronymus = S. Jerome.

* Hierotheus, a Greek monk in Iweron monastery, on Mt. Athos; d. in 1745. His relics were brought to some church in the Caucasus. F. 13 Sept., Mz. Mrt.

Hierotheus, an Athenian, alleged teacher of Pseudo-Dionysius, is said to have composed two works: "Theological Rudiments" and "Hymns of Divine Love." He was formerly believed to have been bishop of Jerusalem (Edom) or of Athens. Probably he is not an historical person at all, but an invention by the author of the Pseudo-Dionysian writings. The spurious chronicle attributed to Flavius Dexter pretends that Hierotheus was the first bishop of Segovia in Spain, and he was declared patron of this town. F. 4 Oct., Rom. Mart.; full office in the Greek Church; at Segovia, dp. 2 cl.; at Jaen dp. 7 Oct.; in the Coptic Church, 16 Apr.—C. E.

Hierusalem and Appion, Mm., venerated by the Greeks, 26 July, MGr. (in some MSS. Hierusalem alone, 25 July); perhaps the meaning of the rubric is: S. Appion, M., at Jerusalem.

Hieu, V.; the first woman in Northumberland to consecrate her virginity to God; she received the veil from S. Aidan, at Hartlepool, where she became abbess. She resigned her place to S. Hilda and founded the convent of Tadcaster (Healaugh) in Yorkshire; d. about 657. She may be identical with S. Bega or Bee. F. 30 May.—O'H., V, 614.—St.—Rams.

Higer, Bp. of Die, France, 20 March. P. B.

Hilaria, V., a daughter of Emperor Zeno; she took a monk's habit in the desert of Scete and was called Hilarius (John), the Eunuch; she delivered her sister at Constantinople from an evil spirit and revealed herself to her father, but returned to the desert. F. 16 Jan., in the Copt. Cal.; 27 Nov., Rb. Sl. Her story is one of the numerous Coptic romances.—Syn., 252.—Arab.-Jac.

Hilaria, M., in Egypt; v. S. Isaac, 18 July.

Hilaria (Lyarya), M.; b. at Demelyana (Demyal), Egypt; when 14 years old, she went to Sersena, to confess Christ and, after many tortures, was beheaded at Tuw. F. 19 July. Cal. Copt.

Hilaria, M., matron at Augsburg, mother of S. Afra. When, with her maids Digna, Euprepia, and Eunomia, she buried her daughter, the four women were burnt in the sepulchral chapel. On the same day were martyred in an anti-Christian riot at Augsburg: Ss. Quiriacus, Largio, Crescentianus, Nimmia and Julian. All these names are somewhat doubtful. F. 12 Aug. Rom. Hilarion the Great, the Father of anchorites in Palestine. Born of pagan parents, about 291, at Tabatha, near Gaza in Palestine; whilst studying at Alexandria, he became a Christian and visited S. Antony in Egypt, where he resolved to devote himself to the ascetic life of a hermit. About 315, he returned home with 15 monks, gave his property to the poor, retired to the desert, near Majuma, the port of Gaza being even then only fifteen years old and lived there amidst great temptations, in extreme poverty and austere mortification. From that time till his death, he practiced severe abstinence, eating only a few herbs and a small piece of bread each day. Overcoming the Evil One in many a hard fight, he was endowed in an eminent degree with the gift of miracles, more especially for the deliverance of those obsessed by the Devil. Molested by too numerous admirers, he left Majuma about 360, and journeyed to the cell of S. Antony in Egypt, then to Aphroditon in Egypt, where, after a drouth of three years he obtained abundant rain. In the meanwhile, during the pagan reaction under Emperor Julian, the pagans of Gaza had destroyed his monastery and sent to Egypt to kill him. But he fled to Alexandria and from there to the Lesser Oasis. A year later, although invited to return to Gaza by the repentant citizens, he sailed with only one monk, from the port of Paraetonia in Libya, to Sicily, where he was found by S. Hesychius at Pachynum (Cape Passaro). With S. Hesychius he sailed to Epidaurus in Epirus and, lastly, to Cyprus, where he retired to a lonely cave; d. at Paphos, 21 Oct., 372. His disciple, S. Hesychius, secretly brought his body to Majuma. There can be no doubt as to the truth of the chief historical features of his life. F. 21 Oct., Rom. Mart.; simpl. in the Latin Church; full office in the Greek and Syrian Churches.—Ord. 115.—C. E.—W.W.—L. S.—Dand. VI, 47.—Syn., 85.—Rams.—Red., 403.

Hilarion of Meglin, Bp., C. He was a Bulgarian nobleman, who left the world and took a monk's habit at Constantinople; in 1134, he was chosen bishop of Meglin in Bulgaria; as such he strongly combated the Bogomil heresy and converted many heretics. He is the most famous saint of the Bulgarian nation; d. in 1164. In 1206, his relics were brought from Meglin to Tirnova. F. 21 Oct. in the Bulgarian Church.—Mrt. Mz.

Hilarion, "the Wonder Worker," C.; b. in the province of Kacheti, in Georgia, he became a monk in the monastery of S. David Garadeja; having lived as a hermit on Mt. Olympus in Bithynia, he travelled to Rome and Constantinople; d. at Thessalonica, 19 Nov., 882. His relics are at Constantinople in the church of the Apostles (in Sosthenio). F. 19 Nov., Mrt. Hilary (Hilarius), C., a monk at Castelvetero near Cosenza in Calabria. F. 12 Jan.

Hilary, C., at Poitiers; v. S. Juventius, 13 Jan.

Hilary of Poitiers, Bp., C., Doctor, "the Athanasius of the West," one of the most famous of the defenders of the Catholic faith against the Arian heresy, with which the East, and more particularly the Imperial Court of Constantinople, was infected during the fourth century. B. of a pagan Gallo-Roman family, at Poitiers, he was led to embrace the faith by the question of the destination of man. Soon after baptism, though a married layman, he was elected bishop of Poitiers (353). When, after the synods of Arles (352) and Milan (355), Archbishop Saturnin of Arles tried to introduce Arianism in Gaul, Hilary broke off communion with him, but was exiled to Asia Minor (Phrygia), in 356. There he studied the Greek Fathers and wrote his principal work on the Holy Trinity. He assisted at the synod of Seleucia, in 358, and accompanied the delegates of this synod to Constantinople, but was bitterly disappointed in his hopes for a change of policy by Emperor Constantius in the Arian question. Shortly after, as a "perturbator Orientis," in order to get rid of him in the East, he was permitted to return to Gaul. There he incessantly worked for the maintenance of the Nicene Creed. At Paris (361) he obtained the removal of Saturnin, but could not force the deposition of the Arian bishop Auxentius at Milan. He was ordered by Emperor Valentinian to leave Milan. D. at Poitiers, 13 Jan., 367. He introduced the West to the Trinitarian speculation of the Greek Church; the Latin Church owes its quick victory over Arianism, after the synod of Rimini (359), principally to S. Hilary. His relics were burnt by the Calvinists, in 1572. He was declared a Doctor of the Church, 10 Jan., 1852. He is patron against snakes. F. 13 Jan., Rom. Mart.; in the Latin Church, formerly simpl. 13 Jan., now dp. 14 Jan. In the ecclesiastical province of Poitiers (principal patron) dp. 1 cl. oct. Tr. rel. 26 June dp. 2 cl. Hilary, Archbp. of Arles, C., one of the greatest bishops of the Church of Gaul. B. in Northern Gaul (in what is now Lorraine), about 401; his relative, S. Honoratus, abbot of Lérins, drew him into his monastery and retained him as adviser when he was elected metropolitan of Arles (426–29). In 429, S. Hilary succeeded S. Honoratus in the see of Arles. He was a powerful orator and the most influential opponent of S. Augustine's teaching on predestination; he bound his clergy to a community life. His mode of life was exceedingly penitential and his charity and zeal were unbounded. He built a number of monasteries and assisted at several councils. His impetuous character precipitated him into actions of more than questionable canonicity, on account of which he fell into disfavor with S. Leo the Great. In 444, he deposed a certain bishop, Chelidonius, for alleged disqualification and shortly after consecrated a substitute for Bishop Projectus; both cases were decided against him, in spite of his personal and vehement insistence. Hilary was commanded by S. Leo to confine himself to his own diocese and his prerogative as metropolitan of Southern Gaul was transferred to the bishop of Fréjus; he was also condemned by an edict of Valentinian II (445); through this dispute the respective rights of the Roman court and the metropolitans were clearly established. S. Hilary died reconciled with S. Leo, 5 May, 449, at Arles. F. 5 May dp., at Aix.—P. B.—C. E.—W. W.—Rams.—Biogr.

Hilary (Hilarus), abbot C.; b. in Tuscany about 476; since 496, he gathered a number of companions in his hermitage and, assisted by a nobleman, Olybrius of Ravenna founded the monastery of Galeata (now S. Ilaro della Paglia, diocese of Faenza), t which he gave his own rule. This monastery was taken over by the Camaldulenses, in 1488; d. 15 May, 558; his body was found, 13 Apr., 1495. F. 15 May dp. in the dioceses of Faenza and Bertinoro; he is principal patron of Lugo, in the diocese of Imola.—H. L.—O.

Hilary, C., Bp. of Besançon, France. He was a Roman deacon; was consecrated bishop of Besançon by Pope S. Sylvester; he built the first cathedral in honor of S. Stephen; d. about 336; his existence is doubtful. F. 22 July. (no feast now).—P. B.

Hilary (Hilarius), C., Pope, 19 Nov. 461–68. He was a native of Sardina, arch-deacon under Leo I, and papal legate at the "Robber Synod" of Ephesus, where, with S. Flavian, he was ill-treated and imprisoned; he saved himself by flight. Several quarrels about jurisdiction in Gaul and Spain were solved by him; he prescribed annual synods for the South of Gaul; he assembled a synod at Rome, 9 Nov., 465, the first Roman synod of which the acts are extant. D. 28 Feb., 468, and was buried in the cemetery of S. Cyriac. F. 10 Sept., Rom. Mart.; dp. at Rome and in Sardinia.—C. E.—W. W.—Biogr.

Hilda, abbess, V.; she was a Northumbrian princess, of the royal house of Deira in England; b. in exile, in 614, a daughter of Hereric, nephew of S. Edwin. Easter, 627, with S. Edwin, she was baptized by S. Paulinus. She dedicated herself to the religious life under the guidance of S. Aidan (Aedhan) of Lindisfarne (she never was in Chelles, France), where she learned to lean to the side of the Celtic missionaries. In 649, she was chosen abbess of S. Hieu's monastery at Hartlepool; in 657, she founded the famous monastery of Streashalch (later on called Whitby) in Yorkshire. To the day of her death she was a zealous defender of Celtic usages and a decided adversary of S. Wilfrid. In her school at Whitby many eminent men were educated (Bosa of York, Hedda of Dorchester, John of Beverley, and Wilfrid). She d. after a long and painful illness, 17 Nov., 680. During the Danish invasions Whitby was destroyed and the relics of S.

Hilda were brought to Glastonbury (this may be a myth) or to Gloucester. F. 17 Nov.—St.—Rams.—L. S.—Dict.—F. J.

Hildegard, V., mystic and prophetess ("Sibyl of the Rhine"); b. at Böckelheim on the Nahe, in 1098, probably of the illustrious family of Stein (that she was a countess of Sponheim, is an unauthentic legend). She was educated by B. Jutta (of the counts of Sponheim) on the Diessenberg; there, being a sickly and weak child, she learned to read, but not to write, and studied a little Latin. After Jutta's death (1136) she was elected superioress of the recluses on the Diessenberg; about 1148, she removed to the Rupertsberg, near Bingen. From her childhood she was favored with visions; when 40 years old, she received a command to publish what she saw and heard; a monk put down in writing whatever she related. She denounced the vices of society, of kings, nobles, bishops and priests in unmeasured terms, but the Emperor, bishops, abbots, and laymen came to ask her advice. Her most important works are: the book "Scivias" ("Know the Ways?"), the Book of Merits, and the Book of Divine Works. Her writings are prophetic, reminding one of Ezechiel and the Apocalypse, at the same time doctrinal and speculative. She d. at Rupertsberg, 17 Sept., 1179. She was never canonized, but was received into the Rom. Mart. Her relics are at Eibingen since 1632 and were elevated 2 July, 1900. F. 17 Sept. Rom. Mart.; dp. maj. at Treves and Hildegund, V., O. Cist., a popular saint; b. at Neuss on the Rhine; wearing male apparel, she made a pilgrimage to Jerusalem with her father under the name of Joseph; later she took the Cistercian habit at Schönau, near Heidelberg, where she was believed to be a man, until she died, 20 Apr., 1188. Cistercian writers call her "Blessed" and deem her mode of life unobjectionable. Her cult was never approved. F. 20 Apr., Germ. Mart.—H. L.

F. 19 June.—H. L.

Hildegund (B.), matron, O. Praem. She was the wife of Count Lothar of Arnsberg; after her husband's death she took the veil and founded the convent of Mehre, diocese of Cologne, where she was elected prioress. Her wonderful gift of prayer, her lowliness of spirit, her patience and her love of the poor, led to her being venerated as a saint from the day of her death. She died in 1183. F. 6 Feb.—H. L.—Rams.

Hildegund (B.), V., daughter of Count Goswin of Höchstadt on the Aisch, sister of the Palatine Herman of Stahleck. She vowed her virginity to the Lord and died on her wedding day. She appeared to her father and asked him to found Münich-Aurach monastery, about 1129. The story probably is an unhistorical legend. F. 14 Oct.—Stamm.—H. L.

Hildelid, V.; one of the first English virgins who took the veil abroad, in France (Chelles or Farmoutiers?), there being, at that time, no nunneries in England. Recalled to England by S. Erkonwald, she instructed S. Ethelburga in monastic discipline and was elected to succeed her as abbess of Barking in Essex. To her S. Aldhelm dedicated a book on Virginity. Both St. Aldhelm and St. Boniface bear witness to her eminent sanctity. She d. about 717. F. 24 March, Engl. Mart.—P. B.—St.—Rams.—F. S.

Hildeman, C., Bp. of Beauvais; b. near Beauvais, he became a monk at Corbie; in 821, he was elected to the see of Beauvais to succeed Raimbert. Hipparchus (Hyperechius) and Philotheus, citizens of Samosata in Syria, and their friends: James, Patragrus (Paregorius), Abibus (Habib), Romanus and Lollianus (Julianus), young men, were crucified after two months' incarceration, under Maximinian, at Samosata. Hipparchus died on the cross, Philotheus was taken down next day and killed by nails, driven into his head, 9 Dec., 297. Their acts are genuine. F. 9 Dec. Rom. Mart.; 29 Jan. MGr.—H. L.—P. B.

Hippocrates (Anba Abkra), John, Ptolemaeus (Abtelma), and Philip (Filpa), Mm. Hippocrates and Philip were brothers, laymen at Damanhur in Lower Egypt; John and Ptolemaeus were priests; all four were beheaded after many tortures. At Sa a church was dedicated to S. Hippocrates. F. 8 June, Copt. Cal.

Hippolytus (Hypolistus), M., titular of the collegiate church S. Ipolisto at Atripalda, diocese of Avellino, Italy; he is the head of a group of martyrs buried in the catacomb of Atripalda. He is said to have been a priest who came from Antioch in Syria and was drowned, in 303, after having converted many pagans and changed a temple of Diana into a church. His legend is spurious. F. 1 May, dp. 1 cl. oct. at Atripalda; 11 May in the diocese of Avellino, dp. maj.; 30 Apr. on Monte Vergine. His relics were elevated 15 March 1633.—H. L.—Off. pr.

Hippolytus, M., a priest of Bishop Fabius of Antioch, martyred under Decius, in 251. He has been confounded with the Roman Hippolytus, who was implicated in the schism of Novatus. F. 30 Jan., Rom. Mart. (v. 22 Aug.)—Comm.

Hippolytus, M.; b. in the province of Valeria (Italy); baptized in early youth, he was brought before the pagan judge by his own father, conducted to Apulia, and beheaded at Migliano. His body in Vigolo Marchese, diocese of Piacenza, was elevated by Bp. Scalabrini, in 1882. F. 30 Jan. dp. in the diocese of Piacenza.—Off. pr.

Hippolytus, a Roman M.; his relics were brought to Cambrai, in 1650. 12 Feb.—P. B.

Hippolytus and Justinus, Mm., somewhere in the Marches (province of Ancona). 11 June.—H. L.

Hippolytus, M., at Rome. According to the spurious acts of S. Lawrence, he was a Roman official, jailer of S. Lawrence; converted by him, he was racked and scourged, then bound to a horse's tail and dragged to death; his nurse Concordia and 19 members of his household were beaten to death with leaded whips. The whole story is a romance. Starting from the proximity of the tomb of S. Lawrence to that of the antipope Hippolytus (cemetery of S. Cyriaca), popular fancy connected the ancient pagan myth of Theseus with the name of Bishop Hippolytus. The Hippolytus of 13 Aug. is the antipope of this name, whose relics were brought from Sardinia and deposited on the road to Tivoli, August 13, 236. F. 13 Aug., Rom. Mart.; simpl. in the Latin Church (very ancient and popular. He is principal patron of St. Pölten in Austria. At Cologne, in the church of S. Ursula, 20 Oct. Tr. rel. (from Gerresheim, about 922); the same F. 12 May at S. Denis, Paris, and at S. Medard, Soissons.—C. E.—W. W.

Hippolytus, M., Bp., and ecclesiastical writer, the most prolific of the Roman Church in the pre-Constantinian era. He is called "Pope of Rome" by the Greeks, by others "Bishop of Portus Romanus" (Bostra in Stony Arabia), or of Porto Romano (at the mouth of the Tiber), or of Ostia, "who appeared before Emperor Claudius to defend the Christians and was drowned in the sea with some companions, in 269." The Latin Church venerates him as bishop of Porto Romano. F. 22 Aug., Rom. Mart., simpl. in the Latin Church; in the diocese of Porto (principal patron) Saturday before the first Sunday in May, dp. 1 cl. oct.; in the Greek Church full office, 30 Jan.; also Rb. Sl. 30 Jan. and 14 July. He was discovered by Döllinger and others to have been the author of the Philosophumena and, as such, a bitter enemy of Pope S. Callistus, the head of the Subordinationist party under Pope S. Zephyrin, and antipope under Ss. Callistus, Urban, and Pontian. With Pontian he was banished to the mines of Sardinia, where he was reconciled to the Church and where both exiles died in the same year (235). Their remains were brought back to Rome in 236 (or later) and deposited 13 Aug.: Pontianus in the crypt of the Popes in the Catacomb of Callistus, Hippolytus on the Road to Tivoli (cemetery of S. Cyriaca); both were equally revered as saints of the Roman Church. The Hippolytus of Rome, who, according to Prudentius, was highly venerated at Rome in the 4th cent., was the antipope, the author of the "Philosophumena." The legend has changed him into a Roman officer and connected him with the legend of S. Lawrence. The Hippolytus of Porto Romano (22 Aug.) probably never existed, i. e., he is identical with the Roman Hippolytus. His name is in the Ambrosian Canon of the Mass.—Lins.—123.—Ruin., 216.—Unt. Rom., 187.—W. W.—All. 199.—Syn., 281 (30 Jan.).—R. Sott., 543.

Hippolytus, M., a hermit in a grotto (villa) near Rome, where he educated Neo and Mary, the children of Ss. Adrias and Paulina; he was incarcerated in the Mamertine prison and died during the cruel punishment of flagellation. All these martyrs, together with the priest Eusebius and the deacon Marcellus, were buried in a sandpit in the Catacomb of S. Callistus. They had been members of a Greek pagan brotherhood; having come to Rome, they were converted and died as martyrs under Emperor Claudius the Goth, in 269. F. 2 Dec., Rom. Mart.; dp. in S. M. in Via Lata, where their relics are venerated.—H. L.

Hippolytus, Bp., M. F. 10 Dec. Rb. Sl. He may be identical with the author of the "Philosophumena," 13 Aug.

Hippolytus Galantini (B.), C., a layman, founder of the Italian Doctrinarians; b. at Florence, 12 Oct., 1565; he was a silk weaver; from his 12th year he assisted the priests in instructing children; himself practicing austere asceticism; he joined the Third Order of S. Francis and founded a society for the instruction of the children of the poor, about 1602; d. at Florence, 20 March, 1619. Beatified, 19 June, 1825. Hormisdas, C., Pope 20 July, 514–23; b. at Frosinone in the Italian Campagna; before receiving higher orders he had been married and was the father of Pope S. Silverius (536–37). Under S. Symmachus he was archdeacon of the Roman Church. He was elected Pope upon the death of Symmachus. Success and happy events mark his pontificate; he removed the last vestiges of the Laurentian schism at Rome; after an attempt to end the Acacian schism at Constantinople had failed, in 515, through the obstinacy of Emperor Anastasius I, it was adjusted under Emperor Justin I; 28 March, 519, the Patriarch John of Constantinople and, after him, 250 Oriental bishops, joined the union with Rome, signing the formular of Hormisdas, by which the Council of Chalcedon, the dogmatic letters of S. Paul and the authority of the Apostolic See in matters of faith were professed. He refused to approve the ambiguous formula "One of the Trinity was crucified according to the flesh" (invented by Scythian monks, in 519). He was on good terms with King Theodoric and, shortly before his death, the persecution of the African Church by the Vandal King Thrasamund ceased. D. 6 Aug., 523, at Rome, and was buried at S. Peter's. F. 11 Aug., Rom. Mart.; dp. at Rome; at Frosinone (principal patron) dp. 1 cl. oct.—C. E.—W.W.—P. B.

Hormisdas (Hormizd), M., a noble Persian of the family of the Achemenides, about the middle of the 4th century. He was deprived by King Bahram (Varanes) of his rank (satrap) and fortune and degraded to the low rank of a camel-driver in the army. When he nevertheless remained faithful to Christ, he was banished from the kingdom. How he died (c. 420?) we know not. F. 8 Aug., Rom. Mart. (he is not venerated in the Orient).—H. L.

Hosanna, v. S. Osanna, 18 June.

Hosius, C., Bp. of Cordova; b. at Cordova, in 256; he suffered for the faith during the persecution of Diocletian; about 295, he was elected bishop of Cordova; 310-26, he was the principal adviser of Emperor Constantine, especially in dealing with the Donatists; in 325, he presided at the Council of Nice in the name of the Pope and the Emperor. At the synod of Sardica (342) he defended the Catholic faith against Emperor Constantius. Like S. Hilary, he is called "the Athanasius of the West," the foremost Western champion of orthodoxy in the early anti-Arian struggles. Weakened by old age and ill-treatment, at Sirmium (257), he, under pressure, signed the second Arian formula, but refused to renounce Athanasius. Taken back to Spain, he repented and professing the faith he had always defended, died, 27 Aug., 357. The Latin Church never gave him the honors of a saint, on account of his weakness at Sirmium, but the Greek, Syrian and Russian churches commemorate his feast, 27 Aug. (5 Nov.)—W.W.—C. E.—Mrt.—Mz.—Biogr.

Hospis, M., at Tubulum in proconsular Africa, companion of S. Maxima, 30 July.—P. B.

Hospitius, hermit, C.; b. at Nizza (perhaps in Egypt); he retired to the ruins of a tower among the rocks of Villefranche, on Cape S. Hospice (Sospis), east of Nizza;

he gave the rule of Lérins to his disciples; practiced severe mortifications, wearing heavy iron chains on his body under a shirt made of rough camel's hair. He was glorified by miracles and foretold the invasion of the Lombards. When the Lombards plundered the country, they found him in his lonely tower, chained like a criminal, and were about to despatch him, when a miracle saved him. D. 15 Oct., about 580. His body was brought to N. D. de Nizza. F. 21 May (tr. rel.) Rom. Mart.; dp. at Nizza.—Comm.—Rams.

Houardon, C., Bp. of Léon, Brittany, 7th century. He blessed the church of Lan-Gouezon, near Brest. F. 24 Nov.; at Quimper, dp. 29 Nov.—Lob. II, 194. (v. S. Huardo.)

Howell = S. Hywel.

Hroznata, M., O. Praem; b. in 1160, of a noble Bohemian family; he served at the court of Ottokar. After the early death of his wife and baby son, he took a crusader's cross, but was dispensed from his vow, founded the monastery of Tepl and took the habit of S. Norbert. He was thrown into a dungeon at Alt-Kinsberg near Eger by robbers and died there of hunger, 14 July, 1217. His body is at Tepl. Cult approved, 16 Sept., 1897. F. 14 July, dp. maj., O. Praem.—Serb., 62.

Huall, C., a grandson of S. Geraint by Caw, and a warrior in the service of King Arthur. It seems he was a brother of S. Gildas, a vulgar marauder, who was executed for his depredations by King Arthur. He may have been under the guidance of S. Gildas in Brittany for some time, but was no saint.—B. G., III, 283.

Huardo (Hoarzon), Bp. of St-Pol-de-Léon, Brittany; 7th century. F. 19 Nov.—P. B. (v. S. Houardon.)

Hubert (Hugbert), C., monk of Brétigny, diocese of Soissons; b. at Brétigny, where he took the habit against the will of his parents; after a severe ascetical life he died on May 24, about 714. F. at Brétigny, 30 May, sem. at Beauvais.—P. B.

Hubert, C., first bishop of Liège, 722-27, apostle of the Ardennes; b. about 656; upon the death of his wife (in 685, at the birth of Floribert), he left the court of Pepin and, on the advice of S. Lambert, spent ten years as a hermit in the wilds of the Ardennes. After the murder of S. Lambert, in 709, he was elected bishop of Maestricht; after 722, he resided at Liège; he evangelized the pagans in the fastness of the Ardennes and transferred the relics of S. Lambert from Tongres to Liège. D. 30 May, 727, at Fura (now Tervueren); his relics were elevated at Liège by S. Floribert, 3 Nov., 743, then transferred to Andain monastery (St-Hubert), 30 Sept., 825, but dispersed by the Huguenots, in 1568. His story is full of fables. The legend of his descent from the dukes of Gascony (Aquitaine) and of his conversion by the apparition of a luminous cross between the antlers of a stag, is absolutely mythical. This old legendary motif has been brought into the history of Hubert from the apocryphal acts of S. Eustace, in the 15th century. He is patron of hunters and healer of hydrophobia. F. 3 Nov., Rom. Mart.; dp. 2 cl. in the diocese of Liège, dp. 1 cl. oct. (principal patron) in the city (whose real founder he was).—P. B.—C. E.—W.W.—Rams.

Huervé = S. Herveus.

Hugbald (B.), a Benedictine monk at St-Pierre-d'Orbais; d. in 937. F. 28 Dec.—P. B.

Hugh (Hugo, Ugo), Ricovero dei Lippi-Uguccioni, C., one of the seven founders of the Servite Order; he was a Florentine nobleman and left the world with his companions, 8 Sept., 1232. He accompanied S. Philip Benizi to France and Germany and was vicar general of the Order in Germany for eight years; d. on Mt. Senario, 3 May, 1282, on the same day as S. Sosthenes. (v. Seven Founders, 12 Feb.)—Serv. 123.

Hugh of Bonnevaux (Bonneval), abbot, C., a nephew of S. Hugh of Grenoble; b. c. 1120 at Châteauneuf (Drôme); he took the Cistercian habit at Mazières, in 1138, was chosen abbot of Leoncel, about 1162, and abbot of Bonnevaux, in 1166; d. towards the end of the 12th century. He is well known as mediator between Alexander III and Emperor Frederic Barbarossa, in 1177. F. 1 Apr. dp., O. Cist. and O. Carthus.; at Grenoble, dp. 4 Apr.; at Valence, 3 Apr. Cult approved, 1 Dec., 1907.—P. B.—Mg.

Hugh, C., Bp. of Grenoble; b. at Châteauneuf-d'Isère, in 1053; as canon at Valence he defended the reform of S. Gregory VII, who consecrated him bishop of Grenoble, at Rome, in 1080. Having waged a zealous but unsuccessful war against simony and concubinage, he resigned (1082) and took the Benedictine habit at Chaise-Dieu. Upon the Pope's command he returned to his flock. In 1084, he gave to S. Bruno the territory on which the latter built the great charterhouse (Grande-Chartreuse). D. 1 Apr., 1132. Canonized, 22 April, 1134 (?). His relics are in the church of Notre Dame, Grenoble. F. 1 Apr., Rom. Mart.; at Gre-noble, dp. 2 cl.; at Valence dp.—P. B.—Comm.—Rams.—Biogr.—Mg.

Hugh, C., Bp. of Rouen, son of Drogo, duke of Burgundy and grandson of Pepin of Heristal; b. about 680; he was primicerius (vicar general) of the Church of Metz, after 722, archbishop of Rouen, bishop of Paris and Bayeux and abbot of Fontenelle and Jumièges, all at the same time. He resigned these numerous benefices and retired to Jumièges, where he died, 9 Apr., 730. In the 9th century his relics were brought to Aspre in Belgium, to save them from profanation at the hands of the Norse invaders in the North of France. F. 9 Apr., Rom. Mart.; dp. at Paris and Bayeux; sem. at Rouen.—P. B.—Mg.

Hugh, C., O. S. B.; b. at Poitiers and ordained priest in the monastery of S. Savin; he was the adviser of Abbot Arnulf in restoring the monastery of St-Martin at Autun; with B. Berno he reformed the discipline at Baume; later he joined the community of Cluny and was appointed prior of Anzi-le-Duc; d. 20 Apr., about 925. His relics were elevated, 13 Dec., 1001. F. 20 Apr. dp. in the diocese of Autun.—P. B.—Mg.

Hugh the Great, C., abbot of Cluny and second General of the Benedictine Congregation of Cluny; b. at Semur, diocese of Autun, as son of the Burgundian count Dalmatius of Semur. Educated by Bishop Hugh of Auxerre, he took the habit at Cluny, under S. Odilo, in 1038, was ordained priest (only 20 years old), in 1044, appointed grand prior and elected abbot of Cluny, 22 Feb., 1049. At the age of twenty-five, being then one of the leading men of his age, he presided or assisted at a number of synods against simony. Highly gifted by nature and grace, distinguished for discretion, faithful observance of the monastic discipline, ascetic austerity against himself and tender mercy towards his monks, a profound spirit of prayer and fidelity to Holy Church, during an untiring activity of sixty years he raised his monastery to the highest level of monastic perfection. The usages of Cluny were fixed by him in 1068; Cluny gained international character by the aggregation of about 200 other monasteries. S. Hugh built the great basilica (five naves and two transepts); the high altar was consecrated by Pope Urban II, 25 Oct., 1095. S. Hugh was the adviser of nine Popes, from S. Leo IX to Paschal II, and godfather of Emperor Henry IV. D. 28 Apr., 1109, and was buried in the abbey church; canonized by Calixtus II, at Cluny, 6 Jan., 1120. His relics were dispersed by the Huguenots, in 1574. F. 29 Apr., Rom. Mart.; dp. O. S. B. d. 2 cl.

Hugh of Montaigu, C., Bp. of Auxerre. He was a nephew of S. Hugh of Cluny; b. at Montaigu in Burgundy, of the counts of Semur; educated by his uncle at Cluny, he was elected abbot of Cluny, in 1096, bishop of Auxerre, 20 Oct., 1114; having overcome many obstacles, he was consecrated at Rome, 5 March, 1116; d. 10 Aug., 1136. F. 10 Aug.—P. B.—Mg.

Hugh, ("Little Hugh of Lincoln"), a boy martyr. He was the son of a poor widow; the Jews of Lincoln are said to have whipped, crowned with thorns and crucified him at the age of nine years, 27 July, 1255. His body was found in a well and brought to the cathedral, where he was buried beside Bishop Grosseteste. The martyrdom of Hugh became a very popular subject for the ballad poetry of the Middle Ages. Whether there was any basis of fact for the accusation against the Jews, there is now no means of ascertaining. F. 27 July.—St.—Rams.

Hugh, C., Bp. of Volaterra, 9 Sept. = S. Ugo.

Hugh, Bp., C. F. at Susa, 6 Oct. = S. Ugo.

Hugh Canefro, priest and chaplain of the Knights of S. John at Genoa; b. at Alessandria, in Piedmont, in 1168; he was most severe towards himself, but most charitable to the sick and poor; he is said by a miracle to have given curative power to a fountain on the Piazza dell' Acquaverde in Genoa; d. at Genoa, 8 Oct., 1230; he was canonized in 1233. F. 8 Oct.; at Genoa and Alessandria dp. 19 Oct.—H. L.—P. B.

Hugh, O. S. B., third abbot of Ambronay, diocese of Belley, 9th or 10th century. F. 21 Oct. (10 May); his ancient cult is now forgotten.—P. B.

Hugh, "the Hammering," C., Bp. of Lincoln, England; b. at Avalon castle, Burgundy, France, in 1135; he took the habit of the Canons Regular at Villard-Benoit, near Grenoble, in 1143, and was appointed prior at St-Maximin, in 1159; against the will of his superiors he joined the Carthusians at the great Charterhouse (1160) and was chosen procurator. When Henry II applied for an experienced superior for his Carthusian monastery at Witham, Somerset, Hugh was sent to England (1175); he became the king's adviser and was elected bishop of Lincoln, May, 1181 (consecrated, 21 Sept.) Although this severe Carthusian protected the people against the oppressions of the government and strongly opposed Richard I, he always regained favor with the king. He built the Gothic cathedral of Lincoln. Sent by King John as ambassador to King Philip August of France, he concluded a treaty of peace between France and England; but died in London on his way back to his diocese, 16 Nov., 1200. His body was conveyed with great pomp to Lincoln, the kings of England and Scotland taking part in carrying the bier. He was canonized by Honorius III, in 1220; his relics were elevated, 7 Oct., 1280, at Lincoln. F. 17 Nov., Rom. Mart.; dp. O. Carthus. and all over England; at Nottingham dp. maj.—St.—L. S.—Hamp.

Hugh de Fosses (B.), C.; he had been chaplain to Bishop Burchard of Cambrai, but resigned to take the habit of S. Norbert, whom he succeeded as abbot of Prémontré (1125); he held the first general chapter of the Order (1137) at Prémontré, at which over 120 abbots and priors were present. He also fixed the usages of Prémontré and wrote a book on the miracles of Our Lady of Soissons; d. 10 Feb., 1161.—P. B.—Mg.

Hyacintha de Mariscotti, V., 3rd O. F. M., foundress of the Sacconi; b. in 1585 at Vignanello, diocese of Civit  Castellana in Central Italy, of a noble Roman family. She spent her youth in vanity; when her lover married her sister, she entered a house of the Third Order (San Bernardino) at Viterbo, where, in spite of her vows, she continued her worldly life for ten years; in 1615, converted by sickness, she devoted herself to austere works of penance. The penances she practiced are almost incredible. Her humility led her to rejoice in any sort of ill-treatment which befell her. Her prayers and good counsel converted many sinners. God bestowed upon her the gift of miracles to aid her in her efforts for the salvation of souls. She founded the Sacconi (dissolved 1870) or Oblates of Mary for the nursing of the sick and aged; d. 30 Jan., at Viterbo. Beatified in 1726, canonized, 14 May, 1807. * Igathrax (Egathraces), M., a Goth; v. S. Bathusus, 26 March.

Ignatius (Ignace), "Theophoros" (God-Bearer or Carrier by God) or the Fiery (Nurana), M., Bp. of Antioch; successor of S. Evodius, possibly a disciple of S. John. He himself assumed the surname "Theophoros" and the Greeks believed he was the infant whom Christ carried on his arms (Matth. XVIII, 2). When Trajan came to Antioch (170) he sentenced Ignatius to be torn by wild beasts at Rome. He was led over land to Seleucia, from there by sea to Smyrna, where he met S. Polycarp, Onesimus of Ephesus, Polybius of Tralles, and Demas of Magnesia. From Troas he was hurried by 10 soldiers through Macedonia and Illyria; at Epirus they crossed the Adriatic Sea. He attained a martyr's crown in the Flavian amphitheatre (Coliseum), 20 (19) Dec., 107. During his last journey he wrote various letters: at Smyrna to the Ephesians, Magnesians, Trallans, and Romans; at Troas to the Philadelphians, Smyrnians, and to S. Polycarp. These epistles, which are invaluable for the doctrinal and ascetical instruction conveyed by them, were interpolated by an Apollinarist in the 5th century. His acts are probably spurious. His relics, in 108, were brought to Daphne in Antioch and from the Daphne cemetery to the temple of Fortuna under Theodosius II. When Antioch fell into the hands of the Saracens, the relics were transferred back to Rome and buried in San Clemente, 1 Feb., 637. F. 1 Feb., Rom. Mart.; Tr. rel. 20 Dec. The Syrians have two feasts in his honor: 20 Dec. his martyrdom (2 cl.), and his burial at Antioch, 29 Jan. (1 cl.) In the Greek Church, 20 Dec., full office; in the Latin Church, 1 Feb. dp. end of Middle Ages. F. in many dioceses 31 Jan. or 17 Dec. Ignatius is patron against scabies and sore throat. Ignatius (Inigo) of Loyola, C., founder of the Society of Jesus. B. in 1491, in Loyola castle, near Azpeitia, in the Basque province of Guipuzcoa, Spain, the youngest of the eight sons of Beltran Yañez de Oñez y Loyola, called Inigo (Lopez de Recalde). The name "Ignacio" he assumed in 1537, "Inigo" disappearing in 1542. Before his conversion he followed the profession of arms and led a worldly life, until he was wounded by a cannon ball during the siege of Pampluna, 20 March, 1521. He was converted by spiritual reading whilst compelled to stay in bed at Loyola. After his convalescence he retired to Monserrat, then to Manresa (1522). His experiences in spiritual combat he wrote down in his "Spiritual Exercises." After a pilgrimage to the Holy Land (1523), he began his studies at Barcelona (1524-26), 33 years old, and continued them at Alcalá, Salamanca, and Paris (1528-35). His idea of founding a society for the greater glory of God brought him into conflict with the Inquisition. At Salamanca, he was imprisoned on suspicion of being one of the mystical sect of the Illuminati (Alumbrados). At Paris, his efforts were successful with the third band of followers (Peter Lefèvre, Francis Xavier, etc.). 15 Aug., 1534, he and six companions took the vows of poverty, chastity, and evangelization of the Holy Land, at St-Denis chapel on Montmartre. Having waited one year at Venice, they went to Rome and placed themselves under the direct obedience of Pope Paul III, who gave them a field of labor in Rome. Ignatius was ordained priest at Venice, 24 June, 1537, and, after the approbation of the Society of Jesus, in 1540, was elected its first General, 4 Apr., 1541. He composed the Constitution, 1541-50. Its most important innovations were: he dispensed entirely with the monastic habit, exempted his clerics from all those common devotional exercises by which so much time was consumed in monasteries, and dispensed them from singing their offices together in choir. The members of his Society were to devote themselves to preaching, hearing confessions, giving spiritual exercises, and educating youth. He founded the German College, the Roman College, and two orphan asylums. He never intended to oppose his Society as a bulwark to Protestantism, but it became a stronghold of the Church at the saddest period of her history. Ignatius lived to see his Order divided into twelve provinces with 100 colleges; d. at Rome, 31 July, 1556; beatified, 27 July, 1609; canonized, 12 March, 1622. His body is in the Gesù Church, Rome. F. 31 July, Rom. Mart.; in the Latin Church, dp: (since 29 Oct., 1644); dp. 1 cl. in S. Ignatius, patriarch of Constantinople, 846-57 and 867-78; b. at Constantinople, in 799; the youngest son of Emperor Michael I, Rhangabe, called Nicetas. After the removal of his father by Leo the Armenian (813), he was sent to the monastery of Satyrus, where he assumed the name of Ignatius; he was elected abbot of S. Satyrus and, 4 July, 846, patriarch. Because he excommunicated the powerful imperial minister Bardas, he was deposed, exiled to Terebinthus island, and replaced by Photius (23 Nov., 857); he was restored by Basil I, in 867; the 8th ecumenical council confirmed his innocence; shortly after the council followed his conflict with the Pope, because he extended his jurisdiction over the Bulgarians who had adopted the Latin rite. He died before the difficulty was settled, 23 Oct., 877. His relics are in the Church of S. Michael, built by him near Constantinople. F. 23 Oct., Rom. Ildebrand = S. Aldobrand.

Ildegar = S. Olegarius, 6 March.—P. B.

Ildephonsus, Archbp. of Toledo and ecclesiastical writer, honored in Spain as a Doctor of the Church. B. of a noble family, about 605, at Toledo; he was a nephew of Bishop Eugene of Toledo, and probably a disciple of S. Isidore; at Agli, near Toledo, he became a monk and was elected abbot; in 657, King Receswinth called him to fill the see of Toledo. He wrote a book on the Virginity of Mary against Jovinian and Helvidius. That S. Leocadia rose from her tomb to thank him for his defence of Mary's virginity, and that the Mother of God appeared to him in the cathedral of Toledo and presented him with priestly vestments, are legends which were known already at the end of the 8th century to Cixila, archbishop of Toledo. D. 23 Jan., 667. F. 23 Jan., Rom.

Illytd (Iltulus), Abbot, C., one of the most famous of the saints of ancient Wales. B. in Brittany, about 450, a nephew of Emyr Llydaw and son of Bican, a noble warrior, he was a disciple, with S. Brioc, of S. Germain the Armorican; he left the Continent, became a knight under King Arthur, and married, in 472; converted (not by S. Cadoc), he left his wife and, assisted by S. Dyfryg, restored the monastery at Caerworgan (Bovium, residence of the Glamorgan kings), later called Llaniltyd or Llantwit (476); in 521, he put S. Sampson in his place and retired to Ewenny, but, in 525, returned to Llantwit, the mother of many saints: David, Sampson, Paul de Leon, Magloire, etc.; d. about 535, near Dol in Brittany (or in Bedd Gwyl Illytd, Brecon?). His relics were in Glastonbury. F. 6 Nov. on Caldey Island (Pmp.); 7 July in Belmont Cathedral and S. Michael's Priory (Newport).—B. G., III, 303.

Illuminata, V.; b. of pagan parents at Ravenna, who accused their daughter before the Prefect Sebastianus of being a Christian; freed from prison by an angel, she fled to Bertinoro; from there to Martana, near Todi, where she was found by her converted parents. She died in peace, shortly before she was to be arrested again for her faith. F. 28 Nov., Rom. Mart.; dp. at Ravenna, Bertinoro, Monte Corvino (Acerno), and Todi, dp. maj. (minor patron).—H. L.

Ina, C., one of the most famous of the sovereigns of the Heptarchy, King of Wessex, 688–726, son of Kenred, successor to his grandfather, Ceadwalla; he founded S. Andrew's in Wells and refounded Glastonbury abbey, to which he transferred the bodies of Ss. Indracta and companions. He is said to have introduced the Peter Pence (its real originator was King Offa, d. in 796). He resigned about 726, with his queen Ethelburga, retired to Rome, where he founded the English hospice, and died there, about 730, in the practice of penance and works of piety. Ina and Ethelburga have never been formally recognized as saints. F. 6 Feb.—St.

Inan, C., patron saint of Beith in Ayrshire, Scotland. 30 Aug.—Ftpr., 182.

Indaletius, M., Bp. of Almeria in Southern Spain; according to a spurious legend he was a disciple of the Apostles and was consecrated at Rome by S. Peter, for Spain. (v. S. Torquatus). He is patron against drouth. In 1084, his relics were brought to the monastery of San Juan de la Peña. F. 15 May, Rom. Indrechtach (Indractus) Dominica, his sister, and seven companions, Mm. They were Irishmen of noble birth and came to Britain to lead a hidden life; a band of robbers killed them at Skapwick, near Glastonbury, about 710. Their relics were at Glastonbury, brought there by King Ina. Their history is very obscure. Perhaps S. Indract was abbot of Iona, killed on 12 March 854, and S. Dominica of Tropea (Cyriaca) was mixed up with his story. F. at Salisburg 8 May; in Irish Mart. 5 Feb.—B. G., III, 318.

Indrechtach (Indrecht), abbot of Bangor; d. 901. F. 26 Apr.—O'H., IV, 504.

Andrew never was in Scythia!); they were tied by a barbarian chieftain to stakes on the ice of the Danube, until dead, because they had forsworn the national religion. They were Goths (Teutons) of the fourth century, not Scythians of the Apostolic age. F. 20 Jan. MGr. Mz. Tr. rel. to Aliseus 20 June.—Thr. M., 215, 287.

Inneen, V., of Dromtariff old church, Cork, Ireland. F. 6 May.—O'H., V, 112.

Innocents, Holy; the male children of two years and under, killed by order of Herod. The Greeks assert that their number was 14,000; the Syrians speak of 64,000, many medieval authors of 144,000. (cfr. Apoc. XIV, 3). Modern writers reduced the number to six, 10 to 12, or 15 to 20. The day and year of their death cannot be determined. They are real martyrs, since they not only died for Christ, but in his stead. Their feast was instituted very early, at Rome in the 5th century. In the West a singular tradition has established the custom of celebrating the Mass of the Holy Innocents, like those of Advent and Lent, without Gloria and without Alleluja. Relics of the Holy Innocents are venerated in many churches. F. 28 Dec., Rom. Mart.; in the Latin Church dp. 2 cl. (before Pius V only sem.) In Bethlehem, it was a holyday of obligation. In S. M. Maggiore at Rome, 5 Nov. (now 6 March); Tr. rel. sem. In the Greek Church, 29 Dec. full office; in the Syrian and Chaldean Churches 27 Dec. (1 cl.); in the Coptic Church 29 Dec. Innocent I, C., Pope, 22 Dec. 401–17; b. at Albano; he was a powerful defender of the Roman prerogatives. To the bishop of Thes-salonica he gave preëminence over the other bishops of Eastern Illyria, issued decrees on celibacy and adultery, obtained from Emperor Honorius secular laws against the Donatists, who, in consequence, returned to the Church in great numbers; he stood up for the exiled S. John Chrysostom against Theophilus of Alexandria and the synod of the Oak; he tried to make peace between the weak Emperor Honorius and Alaric, king of the Goths. But notwithstanding all the Pontiff's efforts, Alaric sacked Rome, in 410. St. Innocent confirmed the acts of two African synods against the Pelagians (in 417). D. 12 March, 417. F. 28 July, Rom. Irenaeus, Bp. of Lyons, Father of the Church. B. about 130, in proconsular Asia; when quite young he was instructed by S. Polycarp. During the persecution of Marcus Aurelius he was a priest of the Church of Lyons and was sent to Rome with a letter of the clergy of Lyons to Pope Eleutherius against the Montanists (177); he succeeded S. Pothinus in the see of Lyons. When Victor I intended to excommunicate the Asiatics because they insisted on following the Quartodeciman practice in celebrating Easter, S. Irenaeus interceded for them. His writings are principally directed against the Gnostics. It is improbable that he died a martyr, although the Church of Lyons venerates him as such. F. 28 June, Rom. Mart.; extended to the entire Latin Church, dp. 26 Oct., 1921, at Lyons (princ. patr.) dp. 1 cl. oct.; at Catanzaro (Pmp.) dm.; 23 Aug. in the Russian Church.—Lins., 114; Leg. Irene, V., M., at Thessalonica, under Maximian. With her sisters Agape and Chionia she lived near Aquileja, was arrested and conducted to Thessalonica. Governor Dulcetius sentenced her to death by fire; she was miraculously preserved in a brothel. D. two days after her sisters, 5 Apr., 304. She was one of those devoted Christians who, at the risk of their lives, succeeded in concealing and preserving for posterity copies of the Holy Scriptures and other sacred books, the destruction of which was avowedly a primary object of the frightful persecution at the end of the third century. Irene is highly venerated in Southern Italy. She is patroness against thunderstorms. F. Rom. Mart. 5 Apr. Her F. is usually celebrated 5 May; at Naples, Sorrento, and Cava 17 Oct.; at Castellamare, 23 Oct. She is minor patron of Ostuni (dp. 1 cl. oct.; Patronage: 31 Oct. dp.) and of Lecce, dp. maj; Patronage, 16 Aug., at Altamura. She is also minor patron of Monopoli, Messina (6 Apr.), and Amalfi.—Passions, 142.—Off. pr.

Irene, V., M., minor patroness of Lecce in Calabria (Terra d'Otranto); at Lecce the opinion prevails that she lived and died there and that she was the daughter of Emperor Licinius. The Copts also venerate a S. Irene, daughter of "King" Licinius; probably she is identical with S. Irene of Thessalonica. F. 5 May. dp. maj. She is minor patron of Bari, Conversano, Terlizzi, Acerenza, Trani, Taranto, Troja, etc.—H. L.—O.

Irene, V., a Byzantine martyr of the first century. According to a worthless legend she was instructed by angels and baptized by S. Timothy; she converted her parents, for which reason she was beheaded by command of the Proprætor Ampelianus at Ephesus, under Domitian or Trajan. Her relics were brought to Constantinople, where she once had three churches and was highly venerated. She may be identical with the "Irene" of Lecce and Southern Italy. The Greeks call her "Megalomartyr," i.e. Great Martyr. F. 5 May, full office in the Greek Church.—H. L.—A. S.—Mgr.

Isidore, monk, C., at Alexandria. B. about 313. He was a disciple of Ss. Antony and Dorotheus; he attached himself to S. Macarius and followed S. Athanasius to Rome; in 388, he was appointed director of the hospice of the Alexandrian Church for the reception of strangers and the poor. Persecuted by the Arian Bishop Lucius and the Patriarch Theophilus, who accused him of holding Origenistic doctrines, he fled to the Nitrian desert, but was exiled to Palestine; at last he found refuge with S. John Chrysostom at Constantinople, where he died, in 404. F. 15 Jan., Rom. Mart.—Par., 89.—H. L.—P. B.

Isidore, abbot, C. F. 20 Jan., Rb. Sl.

Isidore of Pelusium (or of Farama), C., a Greek writer; b. at Misr (Cahira)* in Egypt, about 370; he was a relative of S. Cyril of Alexandria, who revered him like a father. He was a rhetor, embraced the religious life at Lychnos, and was elected abbot of Farama monastery near Pelusium. He was a staunch defender of S. John Chrysostom against the turbulent Patriarch Theophilus and took an active part in the Nestorian controversies of his time. He was one of the most attractive figures of Egyptian monasticism: austere to himself, knowing the advantages, but also the dangers of solitude, open and fearless, an accomplished philosopher and theologian. Though often embroiled in the controversies of his time, he was held in general esteem both as a theologian and as a guide of souls. His few letters which have come down to us, are remarkable for clearness in the statement of doctrine and for elegance of diction. F. 4 Feb. Rom. Mart., by the Latin Basilians, dp. Syn. 293.—H. L.—P. B.—Rams.; full office in the Greek, Coptic, and Syrian Churches. In Egypt (Lat.), 13 Feb. dp.; also by the Priests of the Hearts of Jesus and Mary; dp. 17 Feb. at Montepeloso in Lucania. Isidore, C., Bp. of Seville and Doctor of the Church; b. of a noble Roman family at Cartagena in Spain, about 560, a younger brother of S. Leander of Seville, S. Fulgentius of Astigi, and S. Florentina. He succeeded S. Leander in the see of Seville, in 600; dedicated all his efforts to the Visigoth Church, promoting science, and founding schools and monasteries; he also worked for the conversion of the Jews. In 619, he presided at the synod of Seville; in 633, at the synod of Toledo. Of greatest consequence was his literary activity: he transmitted the treasures of the sinking Roman civilization to the rising Teutonic world; he was the encyclopedist of his time, mastering all the branches of knowledge of his age; he was the most prolific and versatile Spanish writer of Christian antiquity, called "the Schoolmaster of the Middle Ages." He became the national hero of the Spanish Church; with the authority of his name he connected and strengthened the peculiarities of the Mozarabic liturgy, the Spanish collection of canons, and even the Pseudo-Isidorian decretals. D. 4 Apr., 636, at Seville. His cult was approved in 1598 and he was declared a Doctor of the Church by Benedict XIV. Under Ferdinand I his body was brought to his own church at Leon. F. 4 Apr., Rom. Mart.; dp. in the Latin Church since 1722; in all Spain dp. maj.; at Seville (principal patron) dp. 1 cl. oct. Ivo, C., Bp. of Chartres; b. of a noble family in Beauvaisis, in 1035, he studied philosophy at Paris, theology at Bec under Lanfranc; was given a canonry at Nesle in Picardy and about 1078, appointed provost of St-Quentin at Beauvais; 24 Nov., 1090, he was consecrated bishop of Chartres at Capua in Italy, by Urban II. He fearlessly opposed the adulterous marriage of King Philip I to Countess Bertrada, in spite of incarceration. Although impatient of abuses, his position in the question of investiture was conciliatory, wherefore he is sometimes quoted as a patron of the "Gallican Liberties." Some of his writings, a collection of canons, sermons, and letters are preserved to us. He was a great light in a dark age; d. 23 Dec., 1115. F. 23 May dp. maj. at Chartres; dp. at Beauvais and Can. James, M., at Lambesa in Numidia; v. S. Marianus, 30 Apr.—Ruinart, 267.

James the Less (the "Just"); Apostle, son of Alphaeus (Klopas) and of Mary, one of the "Brethren of Jesus" and of Judas Thaddaeus. His relationship to Jesus cannot be determined with anything approaching to certainty. Probably his mother was a sister of the Bl. Virgin Mary. He is the author of the Epistle of S. James. The Greeks distinguish the Apostle from the "Brother" of Jesus, but the Latin Church has always identified the two. He plays no part in the Gospels, but in the Acts appears in Jerusalem, the directing center of the primitive Church, first beside S. Peter, but after S. Peter's flight (42), as the only head of the Jewish-Christian center of doctrine and mission work, as bishop of Jerusalem. At the Council of the Apostles he spoke the last and decisive word after S. Peter and probably drew up the decree, which carried his name amongst the famous gentile Christians. In tradition James is the great saint, the Just, the first Bishop of Jerusalem, the abstemious ascetic (without scissors, ointment, bath); for his personal sanctity and his attachment to the Old Testament forms and the Temple he was highly esteemed also by the Jews. Because he led many Jews to Christ, he was thrown from the parapet of the Temple, stoned and finally killed with a fuller's club, Easter 62 (60?). He was buried on Mt. Sion; his relics were brought to Constantinople, thence to the church of the Apostles in Rome. He is patron of fullers and hatters. F. (with S. Philip) 1 May dp. 2 cl. in the Latin Church (Anniversary of the Dedication of S. Philip's Church at Rome. He is principal patron of the diocese of Funchal. * James of Edessa, "the Interpreter," C., Bp., also called the "Syrian Jerome," a Doctor of the Jacobite Church; b. at Ain Debha, province of Antioch about 640; he studied under Severus Sebokht at Keneshre, on the Euphrates; about 648, he was chosen bishop of Edessa. He met with opposition when he enforced the canon laws, and resigned and retired to Kaisum, near Samosata, from there to Eushebona, diocese of Antioch, then to Tell Adda in Mesopotamia. After the death of his successor, Habib, he again took possession of the episcopal see of Edessa, but died four months later, at Tell Adda, 5 June, 708. He was a Monophysite, a man of great culture, an interpreter of the S. Scriptures; he drew up a liturgy, the Syrian Horology, and a calendar of feasts. F. in the Jacobite Church, 5 June (29 May).—Rb. Praem., M., at Gorkum; b. at Oudenarden, Flanders; he took the Norbertine habit at Middelburg; in 1566, he apostatized, preaching and writing against the Church, but after a few months repented and returned to his monastery; he was appointed curate at Munster in Holland; in 1572 he was imprisoned by the Calvinists with S. Adrian and martyred at Briel; he was hanged, not from the beam, but from the topmost rung of a ladder, 9 July, 1572. He was canonized 29 June, 1867. (v. S. Nicholas Piek.)—Seeb., 61.

James, Bp. of Antioch Mygdonia (Nisibis), "Miracle Worker," one of the Doctors of the Syrian Church; b. at Nisibis, about 275, perhaps a relative of S. Gregory the Illuminator. In youth he led a hermit's life; elected bishop of Nisibis, he continued his austerities. Under Maximin Daza (307-13) he was tortured, but set free again; at the Nicene Council he was one of the principal champions against the Arians. Twice he saved Nisibis from destruction by his influence with King Shapur II, of Persia. It is said that God showed him the Ark of Noë. D. about 350. James the Greater, Apostle, son of the fisherman Zebedee, older brother of S. John the Evangelist, with whom and S. Peter he belonged to the first called and more prominent of the Apostles. He was present with them at the Transfiguration and at the Prayer of the Lord in the Garden of Olives. With S. John he received the surname "Boanerges," "Son of Thunder" (Mark III, 17) for his fiery temper and eloquence. As one of the leaders of the Apostles, Herod imprisoned him, Easter 42, and had him beheaded. One of the bailiffs is said to have been converted by, and beheaded with, him. According to an old Christian tradition the Apostles remained at Jerusalem up to the year 42, after the death of S. James. Spanish historians and martyrologists assert that between the Ascension and the death of S. James, that Apostle travelled to Spain, and preached there. There is not a shred of evidence to support this assertion; the old Spanish sources are silent on this question. S. Isidore of Seville is the first who speaks of it. The story that the body of S. James found its way to the coast of Spain in the first century and was finally lodged at Compostela in the ninth century is denied by Duchesne, Ermoni, etc. Also the church of St. Sernin at Toulouse claims to possess the body of S. James the Greater; at Monte Grigiano, in Italy, his body was found in 1395; the same claim is made for the church of Zibilli, near Milan, Italy. At Saragossa, in the famous church of N. S. del Pilar, a small statue of Our Lady is venerated, which St. James is said to have set up there when he made his Apostolic tour in Spain. He is patron of druggists, pilgrims, fauchini, wax chandlers, against rheumatism, in war, etc. F. originally in the Syrian, African, and Gallican churches, 27 Dec., with S. John; now in the Latin Church, 25 July (Tr. rel. from Jerusalem to Iria in Spain) dp. 2 cl. In the Greek Church, 30 Apr., full office; in the Coptic Church, 12 Apr. James (Jacob), Patriarch, son of Isaac and Rebecca, father of twelve sons, the founder of the twelve tribes of Israel, called after him "the House of Jacob," but usually from his surname "Sons of Israel." B. after his twin brother, Esau, he bought Esau's birth right with a pottage of lentils and, by a ruse of his mother, also obtained from his father, the Messianic blessing which was intended for Esau. To escape Esau's anger, he fled to Aram, where he served 14 years to obtain from Laban his daughter Rachel; grown very rich, he returned to Canaan, was reconciled to Esau, and settled at Sichem, later on at Bethel and Ephrata. With seventy souls he joined his son Joseph in Egypt, where he died, 147 years old. His sons brought his body to Canaan and buried him in Isaac's tomb, near Mambre. James of Konewetz; v. S. Theophilus, 21 Oct.

James, "Brother of Christ," according to the Greeks and Syrians one of the 72 Disciples and first bishop of Jerusalem. They believe, according to apocryphal sources, that he was a son of Joseph from a former marriage. He suffered at Jerusalem, being thrown from the pinnacle of the Temple, stoned, and at last killed by a fuller's club, Easter 62. The Greeks say that the Apostle

James suffered martyrdom, not at Jerusalem, but at Ostracina in Egypt. The Latin Church, however, has always identified the Brother of the Lord with the Apostle S. James. F. of the "Brother of the Lord" in the Greek Church, 23 Oct., full office (F. of the Apostle, 9 Oct.) The Armenians also distinguish between the "Brother 'of the Lord'" and the Apostle, and keep the F. of the former with that of S. David before Epiphany, and the F. of the Apostle with that of S. Simon Tuesday before our first Sunday in Advent.—H. L.—Jes.

Jane of Toulouse (B.), V., the first Tertiary O. Carm.; b. at Toulouse, beginning of the 13th century, of noble family; remaining in the house of her father, she received the Carmelite habit from Simon Stock, in 1265; Jane is considered the foundress of the 3rd Order of Mt. Carmel; d. at Toulouse, 31 March, 1286. Her body was elevated in 1805. Cult approved, 11 Feb., 1895. F. dp. 31 March; O. Carm., 20 Oct. at Toulouse.—Seeb. 265.

Jane (Jeanne) Mary de Maille, matron, 3rd O. F. M.; b. 14 Apr., 1331, at Roche-Saint-Quentin of an old noble family. She was married to Baron Robert of Silly, with whom she led a virginal life for 16 years. After the death of her husband (1362), having been deprived of all she had by her husband's relatives, she retired to Tours, where she led a life of privation and poverty next to the church of S. Martin; d. 28 March, 1414, at Tours. Cult approved, 14 Sept., 1871. F. 28 March dp. at Le Mans, Tours, and Bourges, 30 March at Poitiers 27 Apr. simpl. O. F. M.—H. L.—Auss.

Jane of the Cross (B.), V.; b. at Azana, diocese of Toledo, 3 May, 1481. To avoid marriage, she fled to Cubas, near Madrid, 1496, where she led an austere life, rewarded by mystical gifts. In 1529, she was elected superioress of the 3rd O. F. M. and introduced the Alcantarine reform; d. 3 May, 1534.—H. L.

Jane (B.), a recluse, whose relics, in 1246, were brought to the monastery of Arivoir, near Troyes, founded by S. Bernard in 1140. F. 4 May.—H. L.

Jane of Portugal (B.), V., O. P.; b. at Lisbon, 16 Feb., 1452, a daughter of King Alfonso V; she entered the Dominican convent at Aveiro, 25 Jan., 1473, and made her vows not before 1485, when the Portuguese succession was secured; d. 12 May, 1490. Beatified in 1693. F. 12 May dp. in Portugal and O. P.—H. L.—Dom., 122.

Jane de Courcelles de Pourlans (B.), V., O. Cist.; b. at Pourlans, 2 Apr., 1591; she took the veil at Tart, where she was elected abbess; in 1623 she transferred her convent to Dijon, and introduced there a reform of the Bernardine rule. D. 16 May, 1651. F. 7 June.—P. B.

Jane Scopelli (B.), V., O. Carm.; b. about 1428, at Reggio d'Emilia, Italy; she took the Carmelite habit, but remained in her father's house. After his death she founded a convent at Reggio, in which she was elected superioress and led a mystical life amid great austerities; d. 7 July, 1491. F. 9

Jane Diana de Villeneuve (B.), V., a Carthusian nun and prioress at Sallabran, diocese of Fréjus; d. about 1295. Her successor was S. Roselina. F. 11 June.—H. L.

Jané Gerard (B.), V., M., one of the Sisters of Charity of Arras in France, who were arrested in 1792, brought to Cambrai, and decapitated, June 26, 1794. Beatified in 1920.

Jane (Vanna) of Orvieto, V., O. P.; b. at Carnajola, near Orvieto; she took the Dominican habit at Orvieto in the convent of the Third Order of S. Dominic; d. 23 July, 1306. Cult approved by Benedict XIV. F. 23 July O. P. and at Orvieto.—H. L.—Dom., 205.

Jane de Aza (B.), mother of S. Dominic; b. in Aza castle, near Aranda, Burgos, wife of Felix Guzman; d. towards the end of the 12th century at Calaruega. Cult approved by Leo XII. F. 2 Aug. dp. O. P.; 9 Aug. at Bologna.—Dom., 215—Seeb., 101.

Jane Viselli (B.), V., O. S.; b. at Cremona, about 1390; d. 3 Dec., 1455; she is called "the Wonder Worker of Cremona."—H. L.

Jane Soderini (B.), V., 3rd O. S.; b. at Florence and educated by S. Juliana Falconieri; after a life of severe asceticism she died at Florence, 1 Sept., 1367. Beatified, 27 Sept., 1828. F. 1 Sept. O. S. and at Florence.—H. L.

Jane de Lestonnac (B.), matron, foundress of the Daughters of Our Lady of Bordeaux; b. at Bordeaux of the noble family de Lestonnac, in 1556; her mother was a Calvinist. She married the Baron de Montferrand, whom she bore seven children. After his death (1597) she spent some time in the novitiate of the Feuillantes, at Toulouse, then (1606) founded her Congregation, which was approved by Paul V, 7 Apr., 1607 (30 houses in her lifetime). In consequence of calumnies she was removed from the office of superioress for three years. She showed heroic strength in bearing adversities; d. 2 Feb., 1640. Beatified, 20 May, 1900. F. 3 Feb. dp. at Poitiers and Bordeaux.—Ord., I, 392.—Seeb., 548.

Jane of Segna (B.), V., 3rd O. F. M.; b. at Segna, near Florence, of a poor farmer's wife, whose sheep she herded. Having taken the habit 3rd O. F. M., she retired into a hut, where she led an austere life; she raised a dead boy to life; d. 9 Nov., 1307. She is patroness against pestilence (since 1348). Cult approved by Pius VI. Januarius, Felix, Philippus, Silvanus, Alexander, Vitalis, and Martialis, Mm., at Rome, probably under Marcus Aurelius. The Roman Breviary claims that they were brothers and sons of S. Felicitas (23 Nov.); but this is unlikely. S. Januarius was buried in the cemetery of S. Praetextatus. Pope Damasus composed an inscription for his tomb. The origin of this group is doubtful. Januarius, Marinus, Nabor, and Felix, Mm., in Northwestern Africa. F. 10 July, Rom. Mart., simpl. in province of Algiers. This group is artificial: Nabor and Felix are identical with the homonymous martyrs venerated at Milan on 12 July; they were Mauretanian soldiers who were stationed and martyred at Milan. Achelis says that Januarius is a double of the Roman martyr of the Praetextatus cemetery; Marinus is identical with Marianus of 11 July.—H. L.

Januarius (Gennaro, January), M., Bp. of Beneventum. His "acts" are a romance (10th century), based on pre-existing material. He was b. at Naples or at Benevento, arrested at Nola, and beheaded, about 305, at the Solfatara, near Pozzuoli, with his deacon Festus, his lector Desiderius, Sosius, deacon of Misenum, Proculus, deacon of Pozzuoli, two laymen—Eutychetes and Acutius. There is a great deal of doubt entertained by critics about the connection which these martyrs have with one another and with the cities mentioned in their acts. The relics of S. Januarius were brought from the little church near the Solfatara (San Gennaro) and were transferred to Naples, in the fifth century; about 820, by Duke Sico, to Benevento; in the 12th or 13th century they were secretly taken to Monte Vergine, where they were found in 1480 and brought back to Naples, in 1497. They now rest in a special chapel in the cathedral. The standing "Miracle of S. Gennaro," i. e., the liquefaction of his blood (contained in two vials) when brought near the head, is attested since the 15th century, but probably occurred sooner (12 century). It now usually occurs on the feasts of S. January and during the octave. A conclusive decision on this miracle cannot be given, a natural explanation has not been found. F. of Ss. Japanese Martyrs. Twenty-six holy men, early missionaries and converts, were martyred shortly after St. Francis Xavier had introduced Christianity into Japan. Some of them were European missionaries, Franciscans, Jesuits; others, natives of the country. The leader of the Franciscans was S. Peter Baptista, the leader of the Jesuits S. Paul Miki; St. Philip of Jesus was a Mexican. They were the first to shed their blood for Christ in Japan, being crucified, near Nagasaki, by order of the Emperor Taicosama, Feb. 5, 1597. They were canonized by Pius IX, in 1862. In 1614 the persecution broke out again and raged for thirty years; the total of known martyrs in this period is 3125, the total of unknown victims, about 300,000. Pius IX and Leo XIII declared worthy of public cult 36 Jesuits, 25 Franciscans, 21 Dominicans, 5 Augustinians, and 107 lay victims. After 1643, the Church of Japan was all but extinguished in the blood of its martyrs.—Ram.—C. E.

Jeremias, the second of the Great Prophets, and the inspired writer of a canonical book of Holy Scripture, equally eminent by nobility of sentiment, depth of thought, and poetical force. He was a son of the priest Helcias, b. at Anathot. In his youth, in the 13th year of King Josias, he was called to the prophetic function. He taught at the royal court of Jerusalem. After the destruction of the Holy City, he was permitted by Nebuchadnezzar to go, with the rest of the people, to Masphat, the court of the Procurator Godolias. Having killed the procurator, his rebellious co-nationalists compelled him to flee with them to Egypt (586), where he died, shortly after his arrival, at the age of over 70 years. Pseudo-Epiphanius relates in his Lives of the Prophets, that Jeremias was stoned by the Jews. He concealed the Ark of the Covenant before the conquest of the city. F. 1 May, Rom. Jerome of Woerden, M., O. F. M.; b. at Woerden, Holland, in 1522. He spent several years in the Holy Land; he was a great orator, preaching against Calvinism, as vicar of the monastery of Gorkum under S. Nicholas Piek. On 26 June, 1572, he was arrested and tortured by the Geuses, then brought to Briel with 18 others, monks and secular priests, and hanged, 9 July, 1572. (v. S. Nicholas Piek).

Jerome (Girolamo) Emiliani, C., founder of the Order of Somascha, a Congregation of Regular Clerks, vowed to the care of orphan children. B. at Venice, in 1481, of noble family; he joined the army of the Republic and defended Castelnovo against the League of Cambrai. Taken prisoner but miraculously set free, after having had recourse to the intercession of Our Blessed Lady, he resigned as podestà of Castelnovo, made a pilgrimage to Our Lady of Treviso, and devoted himself to works of charity at Venice. Then he studied theology and was ordained to the priesthood at Venice, in 1518. The hospitals and hovels of the poor became his favorite resorts. In the year of the famine and plague (1528) he rented a house for the orphans near the church of S. Rose and took charge of the hospital for Incurables. In 1531, he built a hospital at Verona and orphanages at Brescia and Bergamo. In 1532, he founded a religious society for the care of orphans, the poor and the sick, with the motherhouse at Somascha, near Milan. He fell a victim to his zeal, contracting a contagious disease at Bergamo; d. at Somascha, 8 Feb., 1537. Beatified in 1747; canonized, 16 July, 1767. Jerome (Sophronius Eusebius Hieronymus), C., Doctor of the Church. B. at Stridon (now Stridova) in Dalmatia, about 341; he came to Rome (354) to study grammar and rhetoric and was baptized by Pope Liberius. Some years he spent at Treves and Aquileja (with Rufinus, Chromatius, et al.). In 373, he entered upon a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, travelled through Thrace, Bithynia, Pontus, Cappadocia, Galatia, and Cilicia; but was detained at Antioch by sickness. There he learned Greek and was introduced into the exegesis of Holy Scripture by Apollinaris of Laodicea. Having regained his health, in 374, he retired into the desert of Chalcis, practicing penance and studying Hebrew. Since the monks annoyed him with their quarrels about the three hypostases, he left them and returned to Antioch, where Bishop Paulinus conferred Holy Orders on him. In 380, he went to Constantinople and heard the exegetical discourses of S. Gregory Nazianzen. Invited by Pope Damasus to assist at a synod (concerning the schism at Antioch and the Apollinarists), he went to Rome (382) and stayed there till 385. He advised the Pope on some points of Scripture, revised the Latin Bible, and became spiritual guide of a circle of cultured Roman ladies (Marcella, Paula, and her daughters, Eustochium and Blesilla). Respected as a scholar, but hated and calumniated for the roughness and bitterness of his nature and because he spread the love of the monastic life, he left Rome in disgust (385) after the death of Damasus, and went to Antioch and Jerusalem. Then he travelled over the Holy Land with Ss. Paula and Eustochium, arrived at Alexandria and the Nitrian desert (386), and finally settled at Bethlehem. There he directed a monastery and school and finished his most important writings, especially the translation of the Bible (Vulgate). His last years were embittered by the Origenist and Pelagian quarrels, especially by his lamentable strife with Bishop John of Jerusalem. He was perpetually involved in controversy, which he conducted with great fierceness. But his life, so full of vicissitudes and troubles, was sanctified by assiduous prayer, severe fasts and vigils, and unremitting toil. He is famous for his compilation of the Vulgate edition of the Bible, authorized by the Church. It is partly an original translation from the Hebrew, partly a revised text of the Vetus Italica, or primitive Latin version of the Scriptures, and, taken as a whole, is the most reliable authority on the genuine text that remains. D. at Bethlehem, 30 Sept., 420. His relics were brought to Rome in the 13 cent.; his body lies somewhere in the Sistine chapel of S. M. Maggiore; the exact spot is unknown. * Joachim Osogowski, C.; a Bulgarian and hermit at Mt. Osogow on the River Skupitstsha; 12th century. F. 16 Aug., Mrt. Mz.

Joachim, Father of the Bl. Virgin Mary. The tradition that the father of the Bl. Virgin was called Joachim, seems to rest on the apocryphal gospels; in other sources he is called Sadoch, Jonachir, Eliachim, Cleopas, Heli. Of this holy man's life nothing whatever has been revealed to us; the legends recorded in the various apocryphal gospels are so distorted as to be quite unreliable. The crypt which formerly contained the tombs of Joachim and Ann, was rediscovered at Jerusalem, 18 March, 1889. His feast is old in the Greek Church, 9 Sept. with S. Ann. The Latins were slow to accept it; in the West it is found since the 15th century, 16 Sept. or 9 Dec. In the Roman Breviary it was assigned to 20 March by Pope Julius II, abrogated by Pius V, restored by Paul V for the Sunday after the Assumption; dp. 2 cl. 1 Aug. 1879; in 1913 it was fixed for the 16 August. In the Coptic Church, 2 Apr. Joachim and Ann are mentioned in the Proskomide of the Greek Mass. The Benedictines keep the feast of Joachim and Ann, 26 July; the Maronites, 9 Sept. and 20 Nov.—C. Joachim de Floris (B.), abbot; b. at Celico, near Cosenza (Calabria), he took the Cistercian habit at Sambucina, was elected abbot of Corazzo in Calabria, but, in 1192, left his monastery to lead a hermit's life at Pietralata; with a number of disciples he founded the reformed monastery of San Giovanni in Fiore; the constitutions of his reform were approved by Celestine III, 25 Aug., 1196. His explanation of the Apocalypse gave rise to a false mysticism in his congregation, which died out in the 16th century. D. at San Martino, Cosenza, 30 March, 1202. His cult was never approved. His congregation gave him the surname "the Prophet."—P. B. (29 May).—Chev.

Joachim Firaiana Diaz (B.), M., a Japanese gentleman, converted at Meaco; he established himself as captain of a ship at Manila; when bringing P. Peter Zuñiga and P. Louis Flores to Japan, his ship was captured by Dutch pirates and brought to Firando; he and his crew, all Christians and members of the Confraternity of the Holy Rosary, were beheaded at Nagasaki, 19 Aug., 1622. Beatified, 6 July, 1867.—Jap.

Joad, according to the Greek tradition the nameless prophet who reproved King Jeroboam for his idolatry and miraculously restored the dried hand of the king. On his way home he was attacked and killed by a lion and buried at Bethel. (III Kings XIII, 1 ss.) F. 30 March.—MGr.

Joan (Jeanne) d'Aro (B.), V., called "La Pucelle," "Maid of Orleans," the French national heroine. B. at Domrémy in Lorraine, 6 Jan., 1412, the daughter of a peasant. While tending her flock, she ever sought union with God in prayer, and was raised to those high degrees of contemplation which seem reserved to but few of His saints. When 13 years old, she was summoned by heavenly voices to pacify her country, which was torn by civil wars, and to deliver France out of the hands of the English, who held the North and were besieging Orléans. On horseback, in male attire, she left home, 23 Feb., 1429. At the first meeting, at Chinon, 8 March, she convinced the doubting Dauphin of her veracity, entered Orléans with a small army, 23 Apr., and relieved the city by violent sorties, 4-8 May. She drove the English from the Loire, Auxerre, Troyes, and Chalons, and led Charles VII to Reims, where he was crowned, 17 July, 1429. The King, however, hesitated to continue the war after the futile siege of Paris, wherefore Joan left the court, 28 March, 1430. 23 May, she was taken prisoner by Burgundians during a sortie from Compiègne, surrendered to the English in November, and accused of heresy and witchcraft before an ecclesiastical tribunal, Bishop Cauchon of Beauvais presiding. She was condemned to the stake, 24 May, 1431, but the sentence was commuted to imprisonment for life. When she reassumed male attire, she was burnt at the stake, at Rouen, 30 May, 1431. After a revision of her trial, by order of Charles VIII, she was declared innocent, 7 Aug., 1456. The more the history of the holy Maid has since been looked into, the more clearly has the genuineness of her divinely inspired mission been shown. After the lapse of nearly five centuries, the Catholic Church formally beatified the "Maid of Orleans," April 18, 1909, and canonized her, May 16, 1920. In 1922, she was declared Patroness of France. F. 30 May, dp. 2 cl. in all France.—Rams.—C. E.—Buch. W.W.—Psych., 55.—F. J.

John the Almsgiver (Almoner. Eleemosynary), Greek or Melchite patriarch of Alexandria; b. at Amathus on Cyprus; his father had been governor of Cyprus; the death of his wife and children he considered as a call from God to lead a more perfect life. Forthwith he gave away all his possessions and devoted himself to a life of prayer and good works. In 609, he was elected successor of the Melchite patriarch, Theodore Scribon, of Alexandria. He got his surname from his liberality to the poor, whom he called his "masters." On two days of each week he attended to the complaints of all who believed themselves aggrieved, nor would he suffer his servants to take food till all wrongs were redressed. It is said of him that he never uttered an idle word. He left seventy churches in Alexandria in place of the seven he had found there. He wrote the life of S. Tychon of Amathus; d. at Amathus, Cyprus, where he had sought shelter from the Persian invasion, 11 Nov., 620. His body was venerated at Venice in the church of S. John the Baptist "in Bragora." It was brought to Ofen (Hungary), by Matthias Corvinus; to Toll, near Presburg, in 1530, and in 1632, to the cathedral of Presburg. He is the original patron of the Hospitaliers. F. 23 Jan. John, C., son of S. Xenophon, 26 Jan.—P. B.

John Chrysostom ("Gold Mouth"), patriarch of Constantinople, 398–407, Doctor of the Church. B. at Antioch, 14 Jan., 344; he attended the lectures of the pagan rhetor Libanius; in 369, he was baptized and ordained lector by the patriarch; after the death of his mother he entered a monastic establishment near Antioch and for some time lived as an anchorite in a cave, but broken down in health he returned to Antioch and was ordained priest by S. Flavian, in 386; 386–97 he developed a splendid activity as orator in the great church of Antioch, becoming, as was said, "the eye, the ear and the hand of the Bishop." In Jan., 398, he was called to Constantinople and consecrated archbishop by the unwilling Theophilus of Alexandria, 26 Feb., 398. He took strenuous measures to reform the clergy and laity, was socially active by founding hospices for the sick and poor (supported by S. Olympias), regulated the church affairs at Ephesus, and sent missionaries to the Goths. At first in great favor at court, offended pride and knavery gradually concerted the "tragedy of Chrysostom," in which the vain Empress Eudoxia, the weak Emperor Arcadius, dissolute clerics, and some bishops (Severinus of Gabala and the violent Theophilus of Alexandria) played a dishonorable part. At the "Oak Synod" (403) Theophilus succeeded in having Chrysostom deposed and exiled. But the threats of the excited people and an untoward accident in the imperial palace so frightened the Empress that she ordered Chrysostom's recall. Two months later he protested against the boisterous festivities held after the unveiling of a silver statue of the Empress, and was again (404) exiled to Kukus in Armenia, and from there to Pityus in Cholcis, in defiance of the Pope, who strenuously espoused his cause. The feeble Patriarch succumbed to the ineffable hardships of the journey at Comanum, in Pontus, 14 Sept., 407. His body was brought to the church of the Apostles at Constantinople, 27 Jan., 438. The surname "Chrysostom" came into general use soon after his death. He is the most prolific writer of the Greek Church; he also reformed the Greek liturgy. His relics are now in the choir chapel of S. Peter's at Rome. F. at Constantinople, since 427, 26 Sept.; since 438, 27 Jan.; now in the Latin, Greek and Syrian Churches 27 Jan., full office; in the Greek and Syriac Churches, 13 Nov., full office. In the Greek Church, 30 Jan., solemnity of the Three Hierarchs (Basil, Gregory Nazianzen, and John Chrysostom; since 1081); in MGr., 15 Dec., his election; 26 Feb., his Consecration; in the Latin patriarchate of Constantinople, 27 Jan., principal patron; 25 Sept. his Desposition dp. maj. His name is daily commemorated in the Greek, Coptic and Syrian liturgies. In 1909 S. John was declared patron of ecclesiastical orators.—L. S.—Max., 174—C. E.—W.W.—Dand., VI, 27.—Syn. (13 Nov.). 120—Rams.

John "de la Grille" (a Craticula), on account of the iron grate which surrounded his tomb), Ep., C.; b. in the Bretagne (Brittany); he joined the Canons Regular at Bourgmoeyen, Blois, was chosen abbot of Guinecamp, in 1134, and bishop of Aleth, in 1144; he was consecrated at Rome; he transferred his see to the isle of S. Malo; putting various reforms into effect in his diocese, he gave his cathedral chapter to the Canons Regular (1157); d. in 1163. His cult was approved by Leo X. F. 1 Feb. at Rennes.—P. B.—H. L.

John, C., Bp. of Irenopolis (Isauria), one of the Fathers of the Nicene Council (325). F. 4 Feb.—MGr.—Mz.

John Soan de Goto, M., a lay brother S. J. in Japan. He was a native catechist at Ozaka; was arrested with S. Paul Miki, 1 Jan., 1597, and, 19 years old, crucified at Nagasaki, with 23 Franciscans and two Jesuits, 5 Feb., 1597. Beatified in 1627, canonized, 8 June, 1862. F. dp. maj. 5 Feb. S. J. (Japanese Martyrs).—P. B.—Seeb., 179.

John Kisaka (or Kimoia), M., 3rd O. F. M.; b. at Meaco, in Japan; he was a silk weaver, baptized shortly before he was crucified at Nagasaki with 25 companions, 5 Feb., 1597. (v. S. Peter Bapt., 5 Feb.)—P. B.

* John Bar Cursus, of Tella (de Mauzelat). b. in 483, at Callinicum in Osroene (Mesopotamia); in 519, he was elected bishop of Tella; because he was a staunch Monophysite he was exiled by Emperor Justin, in 521; he visited Constantinople in 533; on his return to the East he was seized in the mountains of Sinjar and brought to Nisibis, Rasain, and Antioch. He died at Antioch in prison (of the Diophysites, i. e., Catholics, says Rb. Sl.), in 538. F. 6 Feb. Rb. Sl.—Wr. 81, 73.

John de Matha, C., founder of the Trinitarians; b. at Faucon, Provence, 23 June, 1160, he was educated at Aix and studied theology at Paris; there he was urged by a vision during his first mass to dedicate his life to the service of the captive Christian slaves. He attached himself to the hermit S. Felix de Valois in the forest of Cerfroid, diocese of Soissons, and went to Rome with him in 1197. 17 Dec., 1198, he obtained from Innocent III the preliminary approval of the rule of a new Order in honor of the Blessed Trinity for the redemption of captives. The Order was fully approved in 1209. The first monastery was established at Cerfroid, the second at Rome, in S. Tommaso della Navicella (in Formis). In 1201, the first captives were redeemed; in 1202 and 1210 John went to Tunis himself and brought back numberless slaves from Africa; d. at Rome, 17 Dec., 1213. His cult was approved in 1665. His relics, in 1655, were brought from San Tommaso in Formis to Madrid. F. 8 Feb., granted by Innocent in 1679, arbitrarily assigned to 8 Feb. by the Spanish procurator O. SS. Trinit. In his own Order, dp. 1 cl. oct. Tr. rel. Saturday before the 5th Sunday after Easter dp. at Madrid; O. SS. Trin. 7 May.—Ord. II, 71.—P. B.

John II, Archbp. of Ravenna, C., elected in 453; by his intercession with Attila he saved the city from destruction; d. 12 Jan., 485. F. 12 Jan., Rom. Mart.; at Ravenna dp. 19 Feb.—Off. pr.—H. L.

John the Apulian, abbot, C.; a monk at Monte Cassino, later abbot of San Giorgio at Lucca. He possessed the gift of miracles; d. in 1055. F. 22 Feb.—H. L.

John, Moses, Antiochus, and Antoninus, hermits in the Syrian desert. John lived under the open sky; he was the teacher of the other three. F. 23 Feb.—MGr.

* John I, "of the Sedras," Jacobite patriarch of Antioch, 631–48; he had been a monk at the Eusebhona monastery at Tell-Adda in Mesopotamia. He composed many rhythmic prayers (Sedras) and drew up a liturgy. F. 25 Feb.—Rb. Sl.—Wr., 139.

* John Calpha ("the Architect"), M., beheaded by the Turks at Constantinople, in 1575. F. 26 Feb.—Mrt.—Mz.

John of Gorze, Reformed Abbot, O. S. B.; b. at Vandières, near Pont-à-Mousson, France; he studied at Metz and Saint-Mihiel on the Moselle. After a pilgrimage to Rome with six companions, he entered the nearly abandoned monastery of Gorze in 933. He was ambassador of Otho I to the Caliph Abderrhaman of Cordova. In 960, he was elected abbot of Gorze and introduced a reform which extended over several monasteries, even to S.

Paul's at Rome; d. 7 March, 973. F. 27 Feb.—P. B.

John Cassian, abbot, C., a famous ascete; b. probably at Constantinople of Scythian parents. After a visit to the Egyptian monks, especially those of Scete, he was ordained deacon at Constantinople by S. John Chrysostom, about 400. Sent to Rome to defend the cause of Chrysostom, he was ordained priest, but did not return to Constantinople, but went to Marseilles, where he founded two monasteries, in honor of the Saviour and of S. Victor. There he wrote his "Instructions on the Monastic Life" and the "Collations on the Egyptian Monks." He was the first to introduce the rules of Eastern monasticism into the West. He is regarded as the originator and leader of Semipelagianism and was an adversary of Ss. Augustine and Prosper of Aquitaine. Personally he took no part in the controversy over his teaching. D. about 433. His name is not in the Roman Mart., but F. in the Greek Church, 28 Feb., full office; at Marseilles, dp. 23 July.—Ord., 175.—C. E.—W.W.

John Joseph of the Cross (Carlo Gaetano), C., O. F. M., b. on the isle of Ischia, off the coast of Naples, 15 Aug., 1654. In 1670, he took the Franciscan habit of the Alcantarine reform at Naples; in 1674, he founded a friary at Alife di Piedimonte. After his ordination he was appointed master of novices, later on superior. He is the founder of the Italian province of the Alcantarine reform. As superior, he won the hearts of all his brethren by his considerateness, while by his skill and energy he propagated and consolidated his institute throughout Italy. At his word, in time of famine, loaves of bread were multiplied, and food and herbs sprang into being. Given to the greatest austerity, he wore the same habit for 64 years. D. 5 March, 1734, in the convent of S. Lucia at Naples. Beatified in 1789; canonized, 26 May, 1839. F. 5 March dp. maj. by all Franciscans. He is princ. patron of the isle of Ischia, and minor patron of Naples and Alife; last Sunday of August F. of Patronage in Ischia.—Seeb., 174.—C. E.—W.W. Rams.

John the Saxon, M. He was a native of Frisia; invited to England with other holy men, by King Alfred, and made abbot of Athelingay in Somersetshire, where his zeal for the restoration of religious discipline led to his being struck down by murderers while kneeling in prayer in his oratory, in 895. F. 22 Febr.—Rams.

John of God, C., Founder of the Brothers Hospitallers; b. at Montemoro Novo, diocese of Evora, Portugal, in 1495. After an unsteady life, first as a shepherd, then as a soldier against France and the Moors, then in the service of an exiled nobleman in Africa, he sold religious books in the district of Gibraltar. He was moved to lead an ascetical life by a sermon of B. John of Avila, but was treated as a madman for his extravagant lamentations. In 1540, he founded a hospital at Granada, where he gave himself with heroic charity to the service of the sick and other works of piety and penance. From his institution, later on, developed the Order of the Brothers Hospitallers (approved, 1 Jan., 1572). In Italy they are called "Fate ben Fratelli": "Do good Brethren." D. 8 March, 1550, at Granada. Beatified, 21 Sept., 1630; canonized, 16 Oct., 1690. F. 8 March dp. in the Latin Church (since 1714); in his own Order and at Granada, dp. 1 cl.; Tr. rel. (1664), 28 Nov. dp. 1 cl. oct. in his own Order. He is Pmp. of Piazza, Sicily. He was declared patron of the sick and of hospitals, 27 March, 1886. He is also patron of printers and booksellers.—Ord. II, 245.—W.W.—C. E.—Biogr.

* John the Syrian (Mar John), a monk by name of John Sabas; b. at Ninive; he lived in a monastery on the Tigris River and left a collection of writings on the spiritual life. 6th century. F. 15 March Syr. Men., Rb. Sl.—Wr. 109.

John, a monk in the monastery of S. Hypatius (in Rufianis) at Chalcedon. F. 16 March. MGR.

John "the Syrian" of Parrano (or Panaca), abbot (erroneously called "of Penne"); b. in Syria; he came to Italy during the Monophysite disturbances and founded a monastery at Parrano, diocese of Spoleto (he never lived at Penne). He also founded the monastery of Ss. Decentius and Germanus, near Pesaro. 6th century. F. at Spoleto, 20 March, sem.; Rom. Mart., 19 March. At Peschia, diocese of Spalato in Dalmatia, a church is dedicated to him. At Penne dp. maj. 20 March (minor patron).—H. L.—Comm.

John, Sergius, Patricius, Cosmas, Anastasius, Theoctistus, and 14 companions, Mm.; they were monks in the Laura of S. Sabas, near Jerusalem, who were killed by the Saracens, in 796. F. 20 March, full office in the Greek Church.—MGR.

John of S. Dominic. F. 23 March, at Salamanca.

John Damascene, C., Doctor of the Church; b. at Damascus about 676; his father was employed by the Arab conquerors in a judicial office of trust and dignity and had amassed great wealth, which he used for the redemption of Christian slaves. John's Saracen name was "Mansur" (Victor). He was educated by Cosmas, a captive monk. When John left the service of the state is uncertain; some time after 730, with Cosmas, he took the Basilian habit in the Laura of S. Sabas, near Jerusalem. Because he combated the Iconoclasts, he was highly honored by the second ecumenical council of Nicea and obtained the surname "Chrysorhoas" (goldflowing). He is the greatest liturgical poet of the Greek Church and the most important classical dogmatist of the Orient. His works were extensively used as authority by the Latin scholastics of the 13th cent. He is the last of the Greek Fathers. His genius did not tend towards original theological research, he was rather an encyclopedist, the "first scholastic." The legend relating the restoration of his amputated hand before an image of Mary (Panagia Tricheir) is apocryphal. Lequien proves that S. John Damascene was already a monk at S. Sabas before the Iconoclastic dispute broke out. He composed many "canons" and "idiomela" for the Greek ecclesiastical office, some of which were used also by the Latin Church. F. 6 May, Rom. Mart.; since 1890, dp. in the Latin Church, 27 March. At Damascus dp. 2 cl. In the Greek and Syrian Churches, 4 Dec., full office. Pope Leo XIII raised him to the dignity of a Doctor of the Church.—C. E.—W.W.—Buch.—Szez., 23.

John of Lycus (Lycopolis), an Egyptian recluse, "the Prophet of the Thebaid"; b. in Egypt, about 305; originally a carpenter, then a monk (330); in 350 he went to the desert, where, celebrated for miracles and the gift of prophecy, he lived 40 years on a mountain near the city of Lycopolis (Palladius, 49). He foretold Emperor Theodosius' victory over Maximus and Eugenius; d. in 394. His cave was rediscovered at Assiut, in 1901. F. 27 March, Rom. Mart., dp. at Lanciano in Italy. The Greeks do not venerate him. F. in Coptic Church, 26 March.—H. L.

John of Capistrano, C., O. F. M., missionary; b. at Capistrano, diocese of Sulmona, in the Abruzzi (of German or French parentage), 24 June, 1386; having finished his studies he took the degree of a doctor of laws at Perugia; he was a Ghibelline; in 1412, King Ladislas of Naples appointed him governor of Perugia. During the war with the Malatesta faction he was imprisoned in a loathsome dungeon. After his release he took the habit of S. Francis, 4 Oct., 1416. Influenced by S. Bernardine, he became a famous preacher (1425), spreading the devotion to the Holy Name of Jesus at Siena, Verona, Ferrara, etc. In 1426, he was appointed papal inquisitor; as such he most energetically combated the Jews and the Fraticelli; he also promoted a reform in his own Order, which was adopted by the general chapter, in 1430. In 1431, he was elected Minister General of the Observants; as Apostolic Commissary and Visitor he was sent to Venice (1437), to the Holy Land (1439), to Milan (1440), to France (1442), and to Sicily (1444). Invited by Frederic III, he preached the crusade in Austria, Bavaria, Poland, and Silesia (1451); he also attempted to reconcile the Hussites of Bohemia and Moravia. He urged the Christian princes to go to war against the Turks at the diets of Frankfort and Wiener-Neustadt. In 1455, he entered Hungary at the head of a Christian army and, with the famous General Hunyadi, won the great victory of Belgrade, 14 July, 1456. D. at Illok (Ujlak) near Peterwardein. Beatified by Leo X. Canonized, Oct., 1600 (4 June, 1724). He is called "champion of the Holy Name, scourge of the Hebrews, destroyer of heresies and commander of the Catholic armies against the infidels." His relics, in 1526, were taken from Villach to Szatmarien in Transylvania; the Calvinists threw them into a well; they are said to be hidden in the schismatic monastery of Bistriz in Rumenia. F. 23 Oct. and 28 March, Rom. Mart.; formerly, 23 Oct. dp. 2 cl. O. F. M., now (since 1890) sem. in the Latin Church; dp. maj., by the Franciscans, Conventuals, and Capuchins dm (28 March), since 1914, in Austria Poland and Hungary.—Ord. II, 377.—C. E.—H. L.—P. B. (23 Oct.)—Auss.—Rams.

John "in the Well," C. During the persecution of Dicoletian he concealed himself with his mother at Kibistra in Little Armenia; later he lived in an old well in the Egyptian desert until he died; 4th century. F. 30 March, MGR.; 29 March, Mz.

John the Silent (Hesychastes, Silentarius, Sabbaita), C.; b. at Nicopolis, in Armenia, in 454. After the death of his parents (471) he founded a monastery in his own city. At the age of 28 he was chosen bishop of Colonia (Taxara) in Armenia. Ten years later he resigned and retired to the Laura of S. Sabas, remaining unknown until S. Sabas presented him for ordination to the priesthood. He spent four years at the monastery and six years in the desert of Ruba in perfect silence. After his return to the Laura, he was locked up in a hut as a recluse; d. in 558. F. 30 March, MGr. and 13 May, Rom. Mart.—Ord., I, 18.—H. L.

John Climacus (Scholasticus or Sinaita), C.; b. in Syria, about 579. He abandoned the world and entered a monastery on Mt. Sina, about 595; later he lived as a solitary in a cave at the foot of Mt. Sina in the desert of Thola; about 639, he was elected abbot of the monastery at Mt. Sina, but after ten years resigned and retired to his hermitage and died, 30 March, 649. His surname "Climacus" he received from a book, "The Ladder (Climax) to Paradise" which he wrote for anchorites and cenobites, and which, in 30 chapters or rungs, corresponding to the secret life of Jesus, treats of the vices (1-23) and virtues (24-30) to lead the reader up to the perfect life of the just. This ascetical work was very famous in olden times and has been translated into many languages. F. 30 March, Rom. Mart. by the Latin Basilians dp. maj. in the Greek Church full office. His name is in the diptychs of the Coptic Mass. —P. B.—C. E.—Szcz., 389.—Comm.

John Baptist de la Salle, C., founder of the Institute of the Brothers of the Christian Schools. B. at Reims, 30 Apr., 1651; he received the tonsure, 11 March, 1662, and was solemnly installed as a canon of the cathedral of Reims, 7 Jan., 1667. On 18 Oct., 1670, he entered the seminary of S. Sulpice at Paris and was ordained priest, at Reims, 9 Apr., 1678. Then he assumed the direction of the Sisters of the Holy Infant for the instruction of poor girls. In 1681, he resolved to found a similar institution for boys: he united lay teachers into a congregation and composed statutes for them, in 1695 (no brother may aspire to the priesthood). After many trials he erected the first Sunday school (1698) at Paris and the first novitiate (1691 at Vaugirard; removed to Saint-Yon in 1705). His last years were spent in close retirement at Saint-Yon, where he revised his rule. D. 7 Apr., 1719, on Good Friday. Beatified, 19 Feb., 1888. Canonized, 24 May, 1900. His institute was approved, 26 Feb., 1725. F. 15 May dp. in the Latin Church; by the Christian Brothers, dp. 1 cl. oct.—Ord., III, 298.—Seeb., 484.—P. B.

John, priest, M., at Kaskhar; v. S. Abdas, 16 May.

John Nepomucene, M.; b. at Pomuk (Nepomuk) in the district of Pilsen, Bohemia, about 1340, son of a (probably German) citizen, called Welfin. 1373–80 he was notary in the archiepiscopal chancery at Prague; in 1374, protonotary and secretary of Archbishop John of Jenstein; in 1380, pastor of S. Gall's church; in 1381, he took the licence at the Bohemian faculty of the university; in 1387, the doctorate of law. In 1389, he was made canon on the Wysherad, president of the ecclesiastical court, and vicar general. On account of his energetic defence of ecclesiastical immunity, he was incarcerated with three other priests from the archbishop's household and tortured by Emperor Wenceslas (Wenceslas himself applied burning torches to his side); 20 March, 1393, he was thrown from Charles' bridge into the Moldau river and drowned. (From Archbishop Jenstein's report to Boniface IX).

The legend that John was martyred because he refused to violate the seal of confession is first found in the Emporium Chronicum of Thomas Ebendorfer (1449); the chronicler, W. Hajek (1541), distinguishes two Johns of Nepomuk: (1) The martyr of the secret of confession, drowned in 1383, and (2) the vicar general, drowned in 1393. This opinion has, however, been rejected by later historians. The Jesuit Balbinus (1670) relates the legend in its present form and says that John Nepomuk was drowned for refusing to betray the secret of confession, 16 May, 1383. In 1719, his tomb in the cathedral of Prague was opened and his tongue found dried up, but incorrupt. His cult was approved in 1721; he was canonized, 19 March, 1729. The assertion of Protestant historians that the veneration of S. John Nepomucene was first introduced by the Jesuits to banish the cult of John Hus from Bohemia, is unhistorical. F. 16 May, Rom. Mart., dp. 1 cl. oct. (principal patron) in Bohemia; dp. 2 cl. or dp. in other dioceses. Before the reform of 1913 the feast of S. John Nepomucene was celebrated nearly all over the Latin Church. John Baptist Rossi, C., secular priest; b. at Voltaggio, diocese of Genoa, 22 Feb., 1698. He studied first at Genoa, then at the Roman College (1711); ordained priest, 8 March, 1721, he became a model of holy living to the secular clergy of the Eternal City. He devoted himself to the service of the laborers, herdsmen, and teamsters of the Campagna and assisted the poor at the hospice of Santa Galla. In 1731, he founded a hospice for the unfortunates who walk the city by night. In 1737, he was appointed canon of S. Maria in Cosmedin below the Aventine Hill; he was full of zeal in choir and confessional, as missionary and as catechist of prisoners and apparitors; broken by sickness (1763), he retired to the hospital of Ssma Trinità dei Pellegrini (San Benedetto in Arenula), near Ponte Sisto, where he died, 23 May, 1764. His relics are under one of the side altars of SS. Trinità. Beatified, 13 May, 1860; canonized, 8 Dec., 1881. F. 23 May, Rom. Mart. dp. at Rome.—Seeb., 1.—C. E.—W.W.

John I, M., Pope, 13 Aug. 523-26. The only information we have of his administration, is about his journey to Constantinople. B. at Populonia in Tuscany. In 525 he was sent by King Theodoric, ardent defender of Arianism, to Constantinople at the head of an embassy of Senators, to obtain from Emperor Justin I a decree that the churches taken from the Arians should be restored to them and that the Arian Goths, who had been compelled to join the orthodox church, could return to their Arian faith. John was received magnificently at Constantinople and invited to crown Justin I. It is beyond question that the Pope could do no more than counsel Justin to employ gentleness towards the Arians; his position as the head of the Church prevented him from inviting the Emperor to favor heresy. On Easter Sunday, 19 Apr., 526, he celebrated Mass in the Latin rite in the Hagia Sophia. Theodoric was exasperated against the Pope, whose embassy had obtained a success very different from that which he had desired. Therefore, as soon as John returned, he incarcerated him at Ravenna. John died in prison a few days later, 18 May, 526. His body was buried in S. Peter's, 27 May, 526. F. 27 May, Rom. Mart.; simpl. in the Latin Church; dp. at Rome, Populonia, and Ravenna.—C. E.—W.W.—Buch.—Biogr.

* John "the Russian," C.; he was taken prisoner in Russia by the Turks, in 1711. They brought him to Prokopion (Urkup) in Asia Minor, where he was a servant to the Turkish commander; d. 27 May, 1730. After three years his body was found incorrupt; many miracles are said to have happened at his tomb, and a church was built at Procopion in his honor, in 1898. F. 27 May, MGr. Mz.—Mrt.

John of Sahagun, C., O. S. A. Born at Sahagun (San Fagondez) in the kingdom of Leon, Spain. He studied at Salamanca and Burgos. After his ordination (1445) he was for a time canon in the cathedral of Burgos. From an early age he held several benefices in the diocese of Burgos; but the reproaches of his conscience forced him to resign them all, except one chapel, where he said Mass daily, preached, and catechized. After having continued his studies at Salamanca for four years, he devoted himself to missionary work, composing enmities and family feuds. His life was marked by a singular devotion to the Mass; each night after Matins, he remained in the choir till the hour of celebration. The power of his personal holiness produced a complete reformation at Salamanca. After a dangerous operation (1463) he took the habit of S. Augustine at Salamanca, was appointed master of novices, and (1471) prior of the community at Salamanca. By his sermons against the vices of the day he made many enemies, who repeatedly attacked him by force of arms. He sedulously denounced the vice of impurity, rife at that time, and died in defence of the angelic virtue, being poisoned by a woman whose companion in sin he had converted. D. at Salamanca, 11 June, 1479. Beatified in 1601; canonized, 16 Oct., 1690. F. 12 June, Rom. Mart., dp. in the Latin Church (since 1729); at Burgos and O. S. A., dp. 2 cl.; at Salamanca (principal patron), dp. 1 cl. oct.—H. L.—P. B.—Rams.—Biogr.

John, monk; v. S. Anna, 13 June.

John Francis Regis, C., S. J., a man of truly Apostolic life, whose heart was ever on fire with the love of God and of his neighbor. B. at Font-Couverte, diocese of Narbonne, Languedoc, 31 Jan., 1597; in 1616, he entered the novitiate of the Society of Jesus at Toulouse. In 1630, he was ordained priest at Toulouse and devoted himself to the care of the sick during a plague. After 1632, with indefatigable energy, he gave missions, principally to the poor unlettered farming people of Languedoc and Auvergne, effecting many remarkable conversions. He provided for prisoners and fallen women; everywhere he founded confraternities of the Blessed Sacrament. D. at La-Louvesc, in the mountains of Ardèche, during a mission, 30 Dec., 1640. His body is at Louvesc. He was beatified by Clement XI, in 1716, and canonized by Clement XII, in 1737. F. 16 June dp. maj., S. J.; at Auch, Viviers, Lyons, and Carcassonne. He is principal patron of the missions in the diocese of Kansas City, Mo., and of the Sisters of Our Lady in the Cenacle; minor patron (2 cl.) of the missionaries of Picpus.—P. B.—C. E.—Mg.

John, Bp. in Armenia, M., of the apocryphal cycle of S. Ursula. He is said to have attached himself to the 11,000 Virgins at Rome and to have been killed with them at Cologne. His alleged relics were found in 1327 and are venerated in Ss. John and Cordula. F. 18 June.—Gel.

William of Monte Vergine at Laceno, but returned to Ginosa and continued to preach and instruct there. He founded the monastery of Pulsano on Mt. Gargano, where he died, 20 June, 1139. Many monasteries adopted the rule of Pulsano (Congregation of Pulsano, O. S. B.). F. at Matera (minor patron), dp. maj. 25 June.—H. L.—Ord., II, 263.

John IV, of Acquarola, Bp. of Naples. His pontificate was disturbed by the inroads of the Saracens. He transferred the bodies of several of his predecessors to the church of S. Stephen. He also copied a number of books (therefore he is called "the Scribe.") D. in 849, on Holy Saturday. F. at Naples 22 June, dp.—H. L.—Off. pr.

John, priest, M., at Rome. He was decapitated under Julian the Apostate, because he refused to burn incense before an idol. His head is at San Silvestro in Capite, Rome. This head in the course of time erroneously came to be regarded as the head of S. John the Baptist. F. 23 June, Rom. Mart.—Comm.

John the Baptist, son of the priest Zachary and of Elizabeth, Precursor (Forerunner) of the Redeemer. He was sanctified in his mother's womb by Christ's presence; a Nasirean all his life, he was praised by Jesus as an "austere hero, another Elias, more than a prophet, angel, sent before the face of the Lord, greatest of all born of women." Announced with name and future greatness to his parents by the Archangel Gabriel, he spent his youth in the desert. When 30 years old, he appeared in the desert of Judea, and near the Jordan, preaching penance, the coming kingdom, and baptism for the remission of sins. Jesus was baptized, recognized, and preconized by him as the Redeemer. He professed Jesus before a Pharisean embassy, before the people and before his disciples as the "Greater One, of eternal existence, the Lamb of God, the Son of God." At last Herod Antipas, whom he had publicly censured for his incestuous marriage with Herodias, his brother's wife, incarcerated him in the fortress of Machaerus, where through the wiles of the vindictive woman he found a tragic end by decapitation. The historian Josephus Flavius attributes Herod's subsequent misfortunes and miserable death to his murder of St. John. His tomb at Sebaste was destroyed under Julian the Apostate. His cult in the Church is ancient. The F. of his conception (sanctification) 23 Sept., full office in the Greek Church; in the Middle Ages in many Latin dioceses 24 Sept. F. of his Nativity, 24 June dp. 1 cl. oct. and full office in all Christendom.—The Greeks celebrate a solemn feast (synaxis) in honor of the Baptist, 7 Jan.; the Armenians, 14 or 15 Jan.; the Nestorians, on the first Friday after Epiphany.—F. of his Decollation, 29 Aug. dp. maj. in the Latin Church, full office in the Greek Church (anniversary of the dedication of his church at Alexandria, in 396). John and Paul, Mm., at Rome, reputed the last to have suffered in Rome for refusing to worship idols. According to the legend, they were officers in the household of Constantia, refused to enter the service of Julian the Apostate, and were therefore secretly beheaded in their own house on the Coelian Hill. In the 5th century, this house was changed into a church, which was excavated in 1887. Their names are in the Canon of the Roman Mass, their passion, however, is spurious, an imitation of the passion of Ss. Juveninus and Maximinus. Modern critics deny their existence and say that their church (titulus Pammachii) was dedicated to the Apostles John and Paul. However, that these two martyrs existed, seems historically certain; as to how and when their bodies found a resting-place in the house of Pammachius, under the present basilica, cannot be determined now; we only know that it occurred in the 4th century. They are patrons against lightning, hail, rain, and pestilence. F. 26 June, Rom. Mart. dp. in the Latin Church; in their own church, Rome, dp. 1 cl. oct.; 27 Jan., Elevation of relics dp. John Gualberto, C., abbot and founder of the Order of Vallombrosa; b. at Florence; his father was lord of Petrojo in the Val di Pesa. When one of his kinsmen (his brother Hugh?), was killed John, as was the custom of the nobles of his century, deemed it his duty to avenge his death. On Good Friday, 1013, as John was going to Florence with his esquires, he encountered his enemy in a solitary place and drew his sword to run him through. But his unarmed foe cast himself on his knees and, spreading his arms in the form of a cross, implored John to spare him for Jesus' sake. Moved by the thoughts suggested by Good Friday, the young nobleman pardoned the wrong-doer. Then, entering the church of S. Miniato and kneeling before a crucifix, he sought pardon for his own sins. Raising his eyes, he saw the Crucified Savior bow his head as if according the pardon asked for. He thereupon accepted to be received into the neighboring monastery of San Miniato. His father vainly urged him to return to the world. John shore off his own hair and donned the cowl in the presence of the brethren. On account of the simonistic election of the abbot Herbert, however, he passed over to Camaldoli with some of the stricter monks, in 1017. Twenty-one years later he retired to the forest-girt solitude of Vallombrosa. This retreat served as a place of refuge for all those who aspired to a severer life than could be led in the relaxed rule of the Orders then existing. In his establishment John united the community life with the eremitical. By aggregating other monasteries to his own he started the severe Order of Vallombrosa. Appealing to the people he energetically fought the plague of simony and concubinage among the higher and lower clergy. The new institute was approved in 1070 and governed by St. John until his death, at Passignano, near Siena, 12 July, 1073. He was canonized 6 Oct., 1193, by Celestine III. F. 12 July, Rom. John III, "the Scholastic," patriarch of Constantinople. He had been a lawyer; after his ordination he was "Apocrisiarius" of the Church of Antioch; he composed the first Greek collection of Canon Law. In 565, he was appointed patriarch of Constantinople by Emperor Justinian I; as such he issued another treatise on Canon Law in 87 chapters, which later on grew into the Greek "Nomocanon." D. 31 Aug., 577. F. 30 Aug. in the Greek Church, full office, with the patriarchs Alexander and Paul IV; also 21 Feb.—Mz.

John IV, "the Faster," patriarch of Constantinople, 582–95; b. at Constantinople under John III, he was deacon and sacellarius (patriarchal vicar for monasteries); he was highly esteemed for his asceticism. He succeeded Eutychius I in the see of Constantinople in 582. He officially and obtrusively assumed the title of "Ecumenical Patriarch" (of the Greek Empire). In virtue of this assumed supremacy he, in 588, held a synod in Constantinople, to examine certain charges brought against Gregory, patriarch of Antioch. Pope Pelagius II, and after him S. Gregory the Great (593), protested against this innovation, fearing lest the title be directed against the Roman Primacy. D. 2 Sept., 595, at Constantinople. He left nothing but a cloak, a blanket, and a prayer-stool, which the Emperor kept as relics. F. in the Greek Church 2 Sept., full office; he is not venerated in the West.—Orth. 104.—C. John, M., the "Christian of secular dignity" who, 24 Feb., 303, at Nicomedia, tore down the edict of Diocletian against the Christians. He was put to atrocious torture and burned alive. His true name is unknown; the name "John" is arbitrary, since none of the sources (Eusebius and Lactantius) have preserved it. The Latins call him "John," the Greeks "Eleutherius" (2 Oct.). Some have erroneously identified him with S. George; perhaps he is the "Evethius" of 24 Feb. F. 7 Sept., Rom. Mart.—H. L.—P. B.

John of Lodi, Bp., C.; b. at Lodi Vecchio, Lombardy; he took the Camaldolese habit at Fontavellano and became a disciple and later the biographer of S. Peter Damiani; in 1072, he was appointed prior at Fontavellano, in 1105, bishop of Gubbio (consecrated by Paschalis II); d. at Gubbio, 7 Sept., 1106. F. 7 Sept. dp. maj. at Gubbio, Pergola, and Lodi, dp. O. Camald.—H. L.

* John Elias, Bp., C. He was elected bishop of Novgorod, Russia, in 1165. In his time the Bl. Virgin, by a miracle, delivered the city (F. 27 Nov.); d. 7 Sept., 1186. His relics were found, 4 Oct., 1438. F. 7 Sept.; Tr. rel., 4 Oct. at Novgorod.—Mrt.—Mz.

John Oldrati de Meda, C., founder of the Humiliates; b. at Meda, diocese of Milan, of noble parents; he retired into the solitude of Rodenaro, near Como, where, upon the advice of S. Bernard, from an existing penitential confraternity he formed the Order of the Humiliates. The wives of the penitents formed a second Order under Clara de Blasconi (for the nursing of lepers). Those penitents who did not adopt the monastic rule formed a "third Order." All three Orders were approved in 1201 and dissolved, 8 Feb., 1571. John died 26 Sept., 1159, at Milan. He was canonized soon after his death. F. 26 Sept.—H. L.—Chev.—Ord. II, 262.

John (Jewish name), or Marcus adopted name), was a companion of S. Paul the Apostle (Acts XII, 25), whom he left during the first journey; but we again find him at the Apostle's side during his imprisonment at Rome; later on he was at Ephesus with S. Timothy. According to the Greek tradition he was bishop of Byblos in Phenicia. He is different from S. Marcus Galileus and from S. Mark the Evangelist. Probably he was born at Jerusalem, a son of the Mary into whose house S. Peter came after his liberation from prison. F. 27 Sept., Rom. Mart., MGr.; 1 Oct. Maronite Cal.—Jes., 400.—Buch.

He studied at the academy of Cracow; having taken a doctor's degree, he was appointed there to the chair of theology. After his ordination he was appointed parish priest at Olkusz (Ilkutski), but, afraid of the great responsibility of parish work, he resigned to become professor of Sacred Scripture at the Academy of Cracow. He made one pilgrimage to Jerusalem, four, on foot, to Rome. Distinguished by piety, liberality to the poor (he literally again and again distributed among the poor all he possessed), and mortification (total abstinence from meat), he died at Cracow, 24 Dec., 1473, and was buried in the church of S. Anna. Beatified in 1680; canonized in 1767. F. 20 Oct., Rom. Mart.; dp. in the Latin Church; dp. 1 cl. oct. (principal patron) in Poland and Galicia.—H. L.—Biogr.—P. B.

John "the Dwarf" (Colobos), C.; b. at Basta in Lower Egypt. When 18 years of age, he took the habit at Shihat and later lived as an anchorite in the desert of Scete under the guidance of S. Poemen. The latter commanded him to water a walking stick, which, when it sprouted, was called "the tree of obedience." After the death of S. Poemen (Bamujeh), John was elected to succeed him. He was the teacher of S. Arsenius and, in spite of his high temper, a model of gentleness. When the Berbers penetrated into Scete (Shihat), he fled to Culzum (Qelzem), to the cell of S. Antony, where he died, in the first half of the sixth century. Under John IV (d. in 579) his relics were brought to the monastery of S. Macarius, because the monks of Culzum were "Chalcedonians," i. e., Catholics. F. 9 Nov., MGr.; in the Coptic Church 17 Oct., and Tr. rel. 22 Aug.—P. B.—Syn., 76.—H. L.

John of the Cross, C., O. Carm., teacher of mystic theology; b. at Fontiberos, near Avila, in 1542. Having begun his studies in the hospital school at Medina, he took the Carmelite habit there; 1544–1567 he studied theology at Salamanca amidst austere mortifications. Having been ordained priest, he was led, under the influence of S. Teresa, to found the institute of Barefooted Carmelites, (approved in 1580). In 1568, he opened the first reformed house for men at Durvello (transferred to Mancera in 1570), in 1569, others at Pastrana, Alcalá, etc. 1572–1577 he was confessor of S. Teresa at Avila; calumniated, ill-treated, and imprisoned, he escaped 14 Aug., 1578. After the separation of his reform congregation from the Calced Carmelites, he was prior at Calvario (1579), rector of the college of Baeza (1579), prior at Granada and Segovia, and visitor in Andalusia (1585). Differences of opinion in fundamental questions of the reform brought upon him a flood of sufferings: forsaken by all, misunderstood and sick in body, he awaited death in the remote convents of Ubeda and Peñuela in Andalusia. D. 14 Dec., 1591. His poems and mystical writings show a keen intellect; he is, like S. Teresa, the teacher of empirical mysticism. Beatified, 21 Apr., 1675; canonized, 27 Dec., 1726. His body was brought to Segovia directly after his death and elevated, 21 May, 1675. F. 24 Nov. (since 1738) dp. in the Latin Church; dp. 1 cl. oct. by the Discalced Carmelites. * John, "the Woman-Hater," abbot of Shihat (Scete) in Egypt. F. 26 Dec. in the Coptic Church.—Cal. Copt.—Syn., 206.

John, Apostle and Evangelist (called by the Greeks "Theologian"), son of the Galilean fisherman Zebedeus and his wife, Salome, younger brother of S. James the Elder. He was pure as a virgin and the beloved disciple of Christ, of fiery, but loyal and devout temperament. Like Andrew he was a disciple of S. John the Baptist, until he was called to follow Christ, in the first year of His preaching. With Peter and his brother James he witnessed the Transfiguration, rested on the bosom of Christ during the Last Supper and followed him to the palace of Annas. He is the only one of the Twelve who did not forsake the Saviour in the hours of His Passion, for which reason the dying Lord made him the guardian of his Immaculate Mother. John was also a witness to the empty tomb and the apparitions of the Saviour. Esteemed a "Column of the Church," he worked with S. Peter in Samaria and in Jerusalem, at least to the year when the Council of the Apostles was celebrated. According to an ecclesiastical tradition John later went from Jerusalem to Asia Minor, where he governed the surrounding churches from Ephesus. The ancient story related by Tertullian that, under Domitian, at Rome, John was thrown into a caldron of boiling oil before the Latin Gate, is probably apocryphal. He was exiled to Patmos, where he wrote the Apocalypse or Revelation. After his return to Ephesus he wrote his Gospel and Epistles. Surviving all his fellow-Apostles, he lived to an extreme old age; d. in the reign of Trajan, about 101. According to Joh. XXI, 23, he is held immortal by many, believed to be sleeping under the earth or to have been assumed bodily into Heaven. His refusal to stay under one roof with the Gnostic Cerinthus, his perpetual admonition: "Children, love ye one another," his sorrow for the young man who had become a robber, show the zeal of the "Son of Thunder" and the tenderness of his heart. He is the principal patron of Asia Minor. His feast on 27 Dec. in the Latin Church (dp. 2 cl.) was originally the feast of Ss. James and John. 6 May F. of his alleged martyrdom before the Latin Gate at Rome, dp. maj. in the Latin Church. In the Greek Church 26 Sept., Death of S. John, full office; 8 May, F. of the opening of his tomb at Ephesus, full office. This feast in the Maronite Church seems to be the principal feast of S. John. The Latins during the Middle Ages believed that he died 24 June, wherefore the martyrologies 24 June announced the "Assumption of S. John" (e. g., at Breslau up to 1858 was kept a Commemoration of S. John, 2 cl., 25 June). At Hertogenbosch (Holland) the following feasts were celebrated: F. of his death dp. 26 June; F. of his exile: 27 Sept. dp.;—Return from exile, 3 Dec. dp. At Breda: Sunday after the Assumption F. of S. John, "the Son of Mary," dp. maj.—Scherm., 257. Lins., 82—Jes., 409.—C. E.—W.W.—Buch.—L. S.—Syn., 212.

John Baptist Vianney (B.), parish priest at Ars in France ("Curé d'Ars"), C.; b. at Dardilly near Lyons, 8 May, 1786. As a farm-hand of 19 years he commenced his studies at Écully, under great difficulties, because his primary school education was very meagre and his talents were defective. He escaped conscription in the Spanish war under Napoleon by a peculiar concatenation of events (not by deserting). At first he failed in his examination for the seminary, but finally was admitted by reason of the entreaties of Abbé Bailley, the parish priest of Écully. He was ordained priest, 13 Aug., 1815, at Grenoble and appointed vicar at Écully; in 1818, parish priest of Ars, diocese of Belley. First he founded an orphanage for destitute girls, "La Providence," where he began his famous catechetical instructions. His chief labor was the direction of souls; during the last ten years of his life he spent 16 to 18 hours a day in the confessional. His advice was sought by bishops, priests, religious, and laymen in every walk of life, by the afflicted and the sick. His amiable character, humility, inexhaustible patience, and untiring zeal, his supernatural gifts, discernment of spirits, and prophecy, attracted great crowds to Ars, some 20,000 a year. He was not spared demonic infestations, bitter enmity, and malicious calumny. For 40 years his food and sleep were, humanly speaking, insufficient to sustain life. His bishop made him honorary canon, the government (1855) a knight of the Legion of Honor. He was a member of the Third Order of S. Francis. D. at Ars, 4 Aug., 1859. Beatified, 8 Sept., 1904. F. 4 Aug., dioceses of Lyons and Belley, dp. maj.; at Ars, dp. 2 cl.; 9 Aug. in all France and by O. F. M.—Kempf, 42.—P. B., XV, 506.

* Jonah, metropolitan of Moscow and all Russia, a violent national schismatic; b. at Galish; he became a monk in Simonow monastery at Moscow. In 1431, he was elected bishop of Rjasan; in 1449, metropolitan; he was a bitter enemy of S. Isidore, who concluded the union with Rome. During the twelve years after Isidore's death he undid the work of his predecessor. D. 31 March, 1461. The Russians celebrate four feasts in his honor: 31 March (death); 27 May elevation of relics; 15 June, the Synaxis of Photius, Cyprian, and Jonah; 5 Oct., the Synaxis of Peter, Jonah, and Alexis. His relics are in the Upenski (Assumption) Cathedral in Moscow; he left 35 pastoral letters. He is daily mentioned in the Proskomide of the Russian Mass.—Mrt.—Mz.

Jonah, a disciple of S. Columban; b. at Susa in Piedmont. F. 28 June.—O'H., VI, 820.

Jonah, the fifth of the Lesser Prophets and an inspired writer of a canonical book of Holy Scripture. B. at Geth Opher, of the tribe of Zabulon. His prophecy consists of a narrative how between 760 and 750 B. C., he was sent to Ninive, probably under Assuridan (772-754), to announce the destruction of the city. The willingness of the Ninivites to do penance was a rebuke to the impenitent Jews. Jonah is a type of Christ. (Resurrection after three days). His tomb is on Mt. Nebi-Osha, near Es-Salt, in Galaad. F. 21 Sept., Rom. Mart.; in the Greek Church, full office; at Jerusalem (Lat.) sem., 26 Sept.; in the Coptic Church, 21 Apr.—Scher., 55.—C. E.—W.W.—Buch.

Jordan the Saxon (B.), C., second general of the Dominicans; b. towards the end of the second century at Borgentreich (Count of Eberstein) in Westphalia; he took the Dominican habit, 12 Feb., 1220, at Paris; in 1221, he was chosen provincial of Lombardy; 22 May, 1222, general of the Order. To his organizational talent the Order owes its first Constitution, to his oratorical ability and personal amiability its rapid extension; he personally won over one thousand novices from French and North Italian schools. His determined policy raised the Order to high rank in the Church of the 13th century. D. 13 Feb., 1237, in a shipwreck on the coast of Syria; his relics are in the Dominican Church near Ptolemais. Cult approved in 1828. F. 15 Feb. dp. O. Josaphat Kuncewic, M., Bp., of Polozk, O. S. Bas.; b. at Wladimir in Volhynia; he took the Basilian habit at Wilna, in 1604; was chosen archimandrite, in 1614; coadjutor to the archbishop of Polozk, in 1617; and archbishop, in 1618. Active for the reform of his order, he was an energetic champion of the union between Rome and the Greco-Slavic Church in Russia and Poland and of the political rights of the Ruthenian clergy against the Polish bishops. Night and day he prayed for the extinction of the Eastern Schism, performing the most rigorous penances with the view of obtaining this favor from Almighty God. Many were the conversions brought about by his indefatigable zeal. He fell a victim to the schismatic reaction at Witebsk, 12 Nov., 1623. Beatified, 6 May, 1643, canonized, 29 June, 1867, the first member of any Oriental Church canonized by the S. Congregation of Rites. His relics are at Polozk. F. 12 Nov. Joseph of Leonessa, C., O. Cap., missionary; b. at Leonessa, diocese of Rieti, Umbria, 4 Feb., 1556; he took the Capuchin habit at the Carcerelle, Assisi. In 1587, he was sent to Pera, a suburb of Constantinople, to minister to the Christian captives there. After two years of missionary labor, having preached to the Turks, and tried to enter the Sultan's palace, in order to preach, he was arrested and tortured (suspended on a gibbet by the right hand and right foot); miraculously saved, he returned to Italy in 1589. He worked in his native province as missionary amongst the poorer classes and for the redemption of slaves, for 20 years. In 1599, he fasted a whole year in preparation for the jubilee; he called his body "Brother Ass." D. of cancer, 4 Feb., 1612, at Amatrice, diocese of Rieti. Beatified, 22 June, 1737;

* Joseph "the Beautiful," patriarch, son of Jacob and Rachel. When 17 years old, he was sold by his envious brothers to Ismaelite merchants, who sold him to Putiphar, a high Egyptian official. Calumniated by the latter's wife, he was cast into prison, but after interpreting the king's dreams, raised to the dignity of governor of the palace and administrator (chancellor) of the kingdom. He induced his father and brothers to settle in the province of Goshen in Egypt. D. 110 years old. Distinguished for piety and the fear of God, conscientiousness and fidelity to duty, and by generosity to his brothers, he is one of the most attractive and most important types of Christ. The wonderful workings of divine Providence in his life are the idea which pervades the entire story of Joseph. Since the monuments and historical sources of Egypt contain no direct account of him, the exact era when he lived cannot be determined. Jacob probably emigrated to Egypt between 1900-1800 B.C. Joseph's relics were brought into the desert by Moses and buried near Sichem, after the occupation of the Holy Land. They were elevated A.D. 415. Joseph of Arimathæa, the rich and respected councillor who with Pilate's permission took Christ's body from the Cross and, supported by Nicodemus, deposited it in his new sepulchre, near the place of the crucifixion. Being a secret disciple of Christ, he had not consented to the Council's decree; after the Resurrection, he collected the blood of Christ in a precious vessel (Holy Grail), which he brought to Glastonbury, when he evangelized Britain. The legend which makes S. Joseph of Arimathea the first Apostle of the Britons and founder of Glastonbury has little evidence to support it, though the choice of him as patron saint of the church of Glastonbury existing there from time immemorial still awaits explanation. The body of S. Joseph at Moyencourt, diocese of Toul, is spurious. F. 17 March, Rom. Mart.; dp. in Palestine, in S. Peter, in the Vatican, O. S. and Passionists (20 March); in the Greek Church 31 May. At Liège Tr. rel. formerly 22 Feb. Transl. of his relics from Ptolemais to Jerusalem, 16 Oct. Ter Israel. In Russia 31 July. Joseph, Spouse of the Bl. Virgin and foster father of Our Lord Jesus Christ. B. probably at Bethlehem; why and when he left his home to settle at Nazareth cannot be ascertained. According to Matth. XIII, 55 and Mark VI, 3 he was a mechanic or carpenter at Nazareth; he married the Bl. Virgin Mary, probably after the Incarnation. According to the apocryphal account he was then ninety years of age, Mary only fourteen. The apocrypha also claim that he was married before and of his wife Melcha (Escha) had two daughters and four sons, the so-called "Brothers of Jesus." The story of the birth of Christ is well known from S. Scripture. The summons to return to Palestine came shortly after the death of Herod, and the Holy Family settled again at Nazareth. S. Joseph's was henceforth the simple and uneventful life of an humble Jew, supporting himself and his family by his labor and faithfully fulfilling the religious practices commanded by the Law or observed by pious Israelites. We do not know when he died or where he was buried. He is patron of artisans and of the dying. His feast was kept by the Copts on 20 July as early as the 4th century. Some Greek Menologies contain it on 25 or 26 Dec., and commemorate him with the saints of the Old Testament on the two last Sundays of Advent. In the West his name first appears, on 19 March, in local martyrologies of the 9th and 10th centuries, and, in 1129, we find a church dedicated to him at Bologna. His cult became popular in the Latin Church through the Carmelites, who brought it from the East. At the end of the 14th century we find his F., 19 March, in the Franciscan and shortly afterwards in the Dominican calendar. The most zealous promoters of his cult were S. Vincent Ferrer, O. P. (d. 1419), Peter d'Ailly (d. 1420), S. Bernardin of Siena, O. F. M. (d. 1444), and John Charlier Gerson (d. 1429). Gerson, in 1400, composed an office of the Espousals of Joseph to Mary (Thursday of Ember Week in Advent), but not before Sixtus IV (d. 1481) was the feast of S. Joseph received into the Roman Calendar. F. of the Patronage of S. Joseph, 3rd Sunday after Easter, dp. 2 cl., since 1847. Devotion to him has grown in the West in such marvellous wise that he is now formally constituted the Patron Saint of the Universal Church (1870) and that the nations of Christendom vie with one another in doing him honor. Joseph the Hymnographer, C., O. S. Bas. He was a native of Syracuse in Sicily, but left his native country after its occupation by the Saracens; first he fled to the Peloponnesus then to Thessalonica in Macedonia, where he became a priest and Basilian monk (831). Brought to Constantinople by S. Gregory the Decapolite, he incurred the anger of Bardas, the Emperor's favorite, and resolved to leave the city. On his way to Rome, he was dragged to Crete by pirates. Having paid the ransom and regained his liberty he returned to Constantinople and was skeuphylax (treasurer) of the Cathedral under S. Ignatius and Photius whom he accompanied into exile. He composed innumerable (often tedious and bombastic) hymns for the ecclesiastical office. At Constantinople he built a church in honor of S. Bartholomew and S. Gregory the Decapolite, to which he brought the bodies of S. Gregory and his disciple John. D. at Constantinople, 3 Apr., 886. F. 3 Apr. Rom. Mart. at Syracuse dp., by the Latin Basilians dp. maj.; in the Greek and Russian Churches, 4 Apr., full office.—Comm.—H. L.

Joseph of Calasanza, C., founder of the Piarists and Apostle of Christian Education. B. of a noble family, 11 Sept., 1556, in Calasanza castle, near Peralta, Aragon. He studied at Lerida (where he took the degree of doctor of laws), Valencia, and Alcalá de Henares. After a dangerous sickness (1582) he was ordained priest by the bishop of Urgel (1583) and became secretary to Bishop Figuera of Albarracin. At Albarracin he was confessor, examiner, and procurator; he followed Figuera to Lerida. After Figuera's death (1587) he was appointed parish priest in the diocese of Urgel and Vicar General for the district of Trempe. He went to Rome in 1592, joined the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine and instructed poor and homeless children. He founded a society for this purpose at S. Andrea della Valle (Clerics Regular of the Pious Schools) and was elected its first superior. Sorely tried by sickness, unjust persecutions and calumnies, he died at Rome 28 Aug., 1647. Joseph of Cupertino, C., O. Conv.; b. at Cupertino, diocese of Nardò, 17 June, 1603. His family name was Desa. At first he was a lay brother in the Capuchin monastery at Martina, near Tarento (1620), but he was dismissed, because "he was good for nothing." Having spent some time with his uncle, a priest at Vetrara, he was, with some difficulty, admitted as a third Order brother and stable hand by the Conventuals at Grotella; by the provincial chapter of Altamura (1625) he was admitted to the clerical state and ordained, 28 March, 1628, on account of his rare spiritual gifts. He is one of the most interesting types of Christian mysticism. Its most striking symptoms: Grasping the supernatural by the corporal senses, the gift of prophecy, protracted ecstasies, jumping and flying through the air, remarkable miracles, etc., were so strange and abundant in the life of this simple and cheerful man of God, that he was called before the tribunal of the Inquisition at Naples and Rome and relegated to the most remote monasteries of the Capuchins and Franciscans at Assisi (Carceri), Pietrarossa, Fossombrone, and Osimo. To be misunderstood and to be calumniated is a lot he shared with many of God's servants. D. at Osimo, 18 Sept., 1663. His relics are at the Conventual church at Osimo. He was beatified in 1753 and canonized in 1767 (16 July). F. 18 Sept., Rom. Mart., dp. in the Latin Church; dp. maj. O. F. M.; dp. 2 cl. at Osimo and O. Conv.—L. S.—H. L.—Auss.—Biogr.

Joseph Benedict Cottolengo (B.), C.; with Dom Bosco the Apostle of Charity in the 19th century. B. at Brà, Piedmont, May 3, 1786; he succeeded brilliantly in his studies and when ordained priest, was presented with a canonry at the church of Corpus Christi at Turin. But his lifework was the service of the poor and distressed. This he initiated by his devotedness to the victims of the cholera. Not one institute only, but very many answering to differences of age, sex, health, bodily and mental fitness, were begun by him and successfully organized into one connected whole, which he called the "Piccola Casa della Provvidenza," the Little House of Providence (1827). For the care of the inmates he founded the Brothers and Sisters of S. Vincent de Paul, the Helpers of the Holy Souls, the Daughters of Compassion, the Hermits of the Holy Rosary, the Thaidines (for fallen girls), and the Priests of the Holy Trinity. He had an exceeding great confidence in the Providence of God. The "Little House" now provides for about ten thousand souls, otherwise spiritually or temporarily destitute. D. at Chieri, Piedmont, April 30, 1842. He was beatified April 8, 1917. F. 30 Apr. at Alba Pompea (2 cl.), dp. by the Franciscans (Cottolengo was a Judas Barsabas, prophet of the New Testament; with S. Silas he accompanied S. Paul to Antioch, after the Council of the Apostles; he is said to have preached in Persia and in the Tabaristana (Armenia), where he was sawed in two. F. 10 Apr. (19 June).—C. E.—Buchb.

Judas Thaddeus (Lebbeus), or Judas Jacobi, Apostle, brother of S. James the Less, one of the "Brothers of Jesus" and author of the canonical Epistle of Judas. The tradition of his life is confused and unreliable. Often he is confounded with Thaddeus of Edessa, one of the 72 Disciples. Oriental sources distinguish the Apostle Jude from Judas Jacobi, a disciple of the Apostles, who preached in Baisan and died at Loud, and from Judas Simon, disciple of the Apostles, who preached at Arimathea, where he was killed by the Jews (Schermann, 339). The principal field of labor of the Apostle Judas seems to have been Palestine; later Greeks and Syrians claim that he preached in Syria, Mesopotamia and Persia. He may have died a martyr in Phenicia, at Beirut or Arad. His grandsons were living in Galilee; they were brought to Rome by order of Domitian, but dismissed when the Emperor saw that they were no rivals. His relics with those of S. Simon were brought to Rome, 7th or 8th century, and rest in S. Peter's church; some are at S. Sernin, Toulouse. F. in the Latin Church (with S. Simon), 28 Oct. (Tr. rel. to Rome); in the Greek Church Judas alone, 19 June; in the Syrian Church, 1 cl.; in the Armenian Church 16 Feb.; in the Coptic Church 2 July. At S. Sernin, Toulouse, 26 Jan., Elevation of Ss. Simon and Judas dp. Judas is patron in "desperate cases."—Scherm., 280.—Jes.—Buch.—C. E.

Judas, Bp., M., the 15th and last bishop of Jerusalem, killed by the Jews in a riot, in 133 (145?). The Greeks commemorate him on 18 Oct., under the name of Cyriacus. An apocryphal legend relates that he was the Jew who revealed to Empress Helena the place where the Cross of Christ was hidden, that he was baptized and suffered martyrdom under Julian the Apostate. He is also identified with S. Cyriacus, the patron of Ancona; the tradition of Ancona claims that he was the Jew who found the Holy Cross. F. 4 May; 31 May in the Coptic Church.—H. L.—Off. pr.—C. E., VIII, 356.

Judicael (Judhael, Gigue), king of Armorica (Brittany), son of King Hoel III and Pritelle; b. about 590. He took the religious habit at S. Méen monastery, in 616, but after the death of S. Méen and of King Solomon (630), he left the monastery, was elected king, and married. He was a friend of S. Eligius. In 642, he returned to S. Méen, where he died as a monk, 17 Dec., 658. His relics were brought from S. Méen to Saint-Jouin-sur-Marne, in 878. F. 17 Dec. dp., at Quimper.—Lob.—L. S.—P. B.

Judith (Jutta), matron and recluse at Kulmsee (Chelmzo) in Prussia; d. in 1264. F. 5 May.—H. L.

Judith, heroine in the war of the Jewish nation against the Assyrian general Holofernes, whom, at great danger to her life, she killed by a ruse, in 647 B. C. F. in the Abyssinian Church, 7 Sept. P. B., 27 Sept.—Cal. Copt.

Judith (B.), recluse at Nieder-Altaich. She is said to have been the daughter of an English king; after her husband's death she made a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, and, with her cousin Salome, was immured by Abbot Walkher (about 1070) in a cell near Altaich. Both are buried in the monastery church. Perhaps Judith is identical with Eadburg, the widow of King Bertric, of the West Saxons. F. 29 June, Mart. German.—H. L.—F. J.

Julia, M., at Carthage; v. S. Fortunio, 17 Apr.

Julia, M., at Rome; v. S. Paternus, 19 May.

Julia, V., M., in Corsica, 6th or 7th century. She was a native of Carthage; after the capture and sack of Carthage by Genseric the Vandal, she was brought to Palestine and sold to a merchant, Eusebius, who treated her kindly; but she had to attend him in a voyage which ended in a shipwreck on the coast of Corsica. Because she refused to partake in the pagan sacrifices she was taken from the wreck by the heathen Corsicans and crucified at Nonza (Capo Corso). Her body was brought to a monastery on the isle of Gorgone. There is possibly in the legend a confusion between two saints of the same name. It is historical that the relics of St. Julia the martyr were in 763 brought from Corsica to Brescia in Lombardy, by the Lombard King Desiderius. Part of them are now at Leghorn (Livorno). She is Principal Patroness of Corsica and Leghorn. F. 22 May, Rom. Mart.—Comm.—P. B.—Mg.

Julia, M., at Carthage; v. S. Catulinus, 15 July.

Julia, Claudius, Justus, Jucundinus, and five others, Mm., at Troyes, France, 21 July, 275. Julia was a maiden of Troyes. In one of the inroads of the Goths on Gaul, she was carried off by the Goth (Allemand) "Emperor" Claudius; he fell in love with the maiden. She lived in a hut he had erected for her. At last she converted him and several other Teutonic chiefs, and all, 28 years later, returned together to Troyes and submitted their necks to the executioner. The relics of these martyrs are shown at Troyes. This is a Gallican localization of the legend of Ss. Luceja and Aucejas. The story is exactly the same in both cases, only the names and localities are altered. Those who perpetrated the fraud were so ignorant that they did not give to even one of the German martyrs a name of Teutonic origin; all are either Latin or Greek. The story is apocryphal. Probably these martyrs are Gallo-Romans of Troyes, upon whom the story was grafted. F. 21 July, Rom. Mart.; dp. at Troyes. Some of the pretended relics were brought to Jouarre.—P. B.—L. S.

Julia Billuart (B.), V., foundress of the Congregation of Notre Dame de Namur. B. 12 July 1751 at Cuvilly; paralyzed (by fright, in 1774, she could not leave her bed for 22 years. She led a mystical life at home; during the revolution she was taken to Compiègne, then to Amiens, and finally to Bethancourt, where, in 1803, she founded her congregation for the education of girls, especially orphans. She was suddenly cured after a novena in 1804. Having suffered much from misunderstandings, even from the bishop of Amiens, she moved her mother house to Namur, in 1809. D. at Namur, 8 Apr., 1816. Beatified, 13 May, 1906. F. 8 Apr. dp. at Namur. 8 Apr. dp. at Beauvais. Kempf, 173.

built the fine church of the Annunziata); she was a niece of S. Alessio Falconieri; in 1285, she received the habit of the 3rd Order of the Servites from S. Philip Benizi; in 1305, she commenced to live in community with some girls and was elected superioress of the Servite nuns, called from their habit "Mantellate"; they devoted themselves to the care of the sick. She was distinguished by an eminent spirit of mortification and prayer and by heroic charity. Her miraculous last communion on her deathbed is mentioned in the prayer for her feast. D. 19 June, 1341, at Florence. Her cult was approved by Benedict XIII; she was canonized, 16 June, 1737, by Clement XII. Her relics are at S. Annunziata, Florence. After many tortures and a victory over Satan, who tempted her in the shape of an angel, she was beheaded, in 304. That her body was brought to Pozzuoli (Cumae), is false. She has been confounded with S. Juliana of Cumae and several other homonymous saints. F. 21 Dec., full office in the Greek Church.—MGr.—H. L.—Syn., 201 (22 Dec.)

* Juliana of Wjasma, M.; she was the wife of Duke Simeon of Wjasma. George, duke of Smolensk, killed her husband at a banquet and drowned Juliana, who vainly tried to escape. She is a martyr of chastity. D. in 1407. F. 21 Dec., Mrt. Mz.

Juliana of Liège (Mont-Cornillon) (B.), V., O. S. A.; b. at Retinnes near Liège and educated at Mont-Cornillon; she took the veil of the Augustinian nuns, when 14 years of age. Two years later she had a vision of the eclipse of the moon, the explanation of which gave occasion to the institution of the feast of Corpus Christi. She induced her friend, B. Eve, to have herself immured; both worked for the propagation of the feast. Juliana herself composed a Latin office. In 1230, she was elected superioress, but was driven from her convent at Mont-Cornillon, by Roger, the general superior of her convent, on account of her austerity. In 1240, she was restored by the bishop of Liège and, in 1246, the feast of Corpus Christi was celebrated for the first time at Liège. In 1248, she was again exiled and found refuge, first at Namur, then at Fosses, where she led the life of a recluse and died, 5 Apr., 1258. She was buried at Villers. Her cult was approved in 1869. F. 5 Apr. dp. maj. at Liège, by the Augustinians, and by the Fathers of the Blessed Sacrament.—P. B.—F. J.

Juliana of Collalto (B.), V., abbess at S. Biagio and Cataldo, Venice; b. near Treviso of the noble Collalto family; at the age of 10 years she entered the Benedictine monastery at Salarola; in 1222, with B. Beatrix of Este, she founded the monastery of Gemmola; in 1226, she founded a monastery on Jews' Island, Venice; d. 1 Sept., 1262. Cult approved by Gregory XVI. F. 1 Sept. at Venice and Ceneda.—Seeb. 31.

Juliana Puricelli (B.), V., O. S. A.; b. in 1427 at Busto-Arizio in Upper Italy; as an Augustinian nun she was the first companion of B. Catherine da Pallanza at the Sacro Monte sopra Varese; distinguished by the spirit of prayer, she died at Varese, 15 Aug., 1501. F. at Varese (since 1650) on the 4th Sunday in Oct. (in O. S. A.) 14 Aug.—H. L.—F. J.

Julian and Basilissa, Mm., at Antioch in Egypt (not at Alexandria, nor at Antioch in Syria). Julian, with his wife, S. Basilissa, led a virginal life. When his parents died, Julian divided his house, made it into a hospital, and spent all his substance in relieving the necessities of the sick and suffering. He ruled over the portion devoted to men and Basilissa, his wife, governed the women's department. After many years Basilissa died in peace; her husband, in the persecution of Diocletian, was seized and subjected to cruel tortures. Antony, a priest, Anastasius, a new convert to Christianity, Marcionilla, a matron, with Celsus, her little son and seven other children and twenty soldiers, were put to death with Julian. The acts purport to have been written by an eyewitness, but they are nothing but a religious romance, perhaps founded on fact. These martyrs were highly celebrated in the Middle Ages. F. 9 (6) Jan., Rom. Mart. In the Mozarabic Breviary they have a special solemn office. They are principal patrons of the isle of Samos, and had a church at Constantinople near the forum. Their bodies are said to be in the church of S. Maria della Scala at Chieri (Piedmont), where the feast of the Finding of their relics is celebrated on 21 May.—Julian and Celsus are patrons of the chapter of S. Giovanni dei Fiorentini, at Rome (dp. 1 cl.) In the Basilica of S. Paul, outside the Walls, Rome: 16 Jan. F. of Ss. Julianus, Celsus, Marcionilla, and Basilissa, Mm., dp.; MGr., 8 Feb.

Julianus Sabas, hermit. He lived in a cave on the Euphrates, in the desert of Osrhoene in Mesopotamia. He strengthened the Catholics of Antioch after the expulsion of S. Meletius; later on he retired to a desert cave on Mt. Sina, where he built a church; he died, 15 Febr., 377, in his desert in Osrhoene. On his way to Antioch he rescued a boy from a well into which he had fallen, and consequently is venerated in the Orient as the patron of children. He is highly celebrated in Syria. S. John Chrysostom preached a magnificent panegyric on S. Julian Sabas (the Wise). F. 14 Jan., Rom. Mart.; 18 Oct., *MGR. Julianus of LeMans, Bp., C., the "Apostle of Celtic Gaul." He was sent from Rome to preach in Gaul, about 250 or 257. A later French legend makes him a disciple of the Apostle S. Peter. His preaching and miracles are said to have converted the entire tribe of the Cenomani. Some of his relics were brought with those of St. Liborius to Paderborn in 1243. Most of his remains were burnt by the Calvinists at Saint-Julien-du-Pr , in 1562. The various English churches and places entitled St. Julian's, and dating from Norman and Plantagenet times, have this St. Julian for their titular saint. F. 27 Jan., *Rom. Julian the Poor, or the Hospitaller, C. According to his spurious legend, related by S. Antonine and very popular during the Middle Ages, he unknowingly killed his parents. He and his wife went to Rome to obtain absolution. Then they retired to some river, where they built a hospital for poor pilgrims. Neither the place where nor the era when they lived can now be determined. The Spaniards claim that Julian was born at Naples of Spanish parents; the French say that his hospice was on the river Gard, in the Provence. He is patron of travellers, hotelmen, and circus people. F. at Paris in his own church, 12 Febr. At Macerata in Italy he is titular of the cathe-Julianus, Chronion, and Besas, Mm., at Alexandria. Julian, afflicted with the gout, unable to walk or to stand, was carried to the court of justice by his two slaves. They were both Christians, but through fear one of them apostatized, while the other, Chronion (Eunus), bravely shared his master's lot. Julian and Chronion were carried on camels through Alexandria, scourged, and finally consumed by a great fire. Besas (Agatho), a soldier, converted by the fortitude of these martyrs, was decapitated in 250. F. 27 Feb., Rom. Mart.; v. Agatho-Besas, 6 Dec.; Chronion-Eunus, 30 Oct.—Comm.—H. L.

Julianus, archbp. of Toledo, 29 Jan., 680, to 8 March, 690. He was of Jewish descent, a disciple of Eugene II, a powerful ruler and the most important personage in Spain at the end of the 7th century. A most learned and versatile theologian, he presided at four synods and obtained for his see the primacy over Spain. At the synod of 684 he accepted the decrees of the sixth ecumenical Council against the Monothelites. Admirable for his charity and kindness to all, it is related of him that no one ever came to him for help but went away comforted and content. He revised the Mozarabic liturgy then in use in Spain. King Wamba, on becoming a monk, received the religious habit from St. Julian. The latter afterwards wrote the life of the saintly monarch. He was buried at the church of S. Julius I, C., Pope, 6 Feb. 337 to 352. He was a native of Rome. He protected S. Athanasius against the Eusebian Arians and received him, with other fugitive bishops, at Rome, in 339. In 340 Julius with 50 bishops, celebrated a synod, the anti-Arian decrees of which he communicated to the Oriental bishops assembled at Antioch. From the Emperors Constans and Constantius he obtained the convocation of the synod of Sardica, in 342. He built the church of the Apostles (Basilica Julia), S. M. in Trastevere (Titulus Julii) and three cemetery churches; d. 12 Apr., 352; he was buried in the catacomb of Calepodius on the Aurelian Way, and venerated since 354. His relics are now in S. M. in Trastevere. He is highly venerated by the Jacobites of Syria as one of their Doctors, his name is daily commemorated in the Syrian liturgy. F. 12 Apr. dp. at Rome; dp. maj. in S. Justin the Philosopher, M., the first important Christian apologist; b. about 105 at Flavia Neapolis (Sichem) in Samaria, son of pagan parents. He received a scientific education at Ephesus, but was displeased with the systems of the pagan philosophers. A venerable old man directed him to study the Prophets; Justin sought and found rest in Christ: he was converted at Ephesus, about 130. In the attire of a philosopher he preached Christ. He may, for some time, have engaged in missionary work in Asia; most of his time he spent at Rome, where he was attacked by the cynic Crescens; d. a martyr at Rome, under Junius Rusticus, prefect of the city (163–67), with Chariton, Euelpistus from Cappadocia, Hierax from Iconium, Paeon, Liberianus and Valerianus, and a woman, Charitina, perhaps 12 June, 167. His acts are genuine, but interpolated. Most of his writings are lost; only his great Apology, the small Apology, and a dialogue with the Jew Tryphon are extant. His relics are in the Capuchin Church at Rome. F. in the Latin Church since 1882, 14 Apr. dp. In the Greek and Maronite Churches, 1 June full office. In Rom. Justinus, a boy M., at Louvre (Lupara), near Paris. He was a Christian child who, journeying from Paris to Amiens with his father, fell in with the officials employed in the search for Christians. The little fellow stoutly refused to betray the direction in which his father had fled. The latter escaped, but Justin was made to die in his place, about 288, at a spot some four leagues from Paris. The old account goes on to add that her little son's head was returned to his mother at Auxerre. His relics were brought from Louvre to Paris (Saint-Justin); he may be identical with S. Justus of Beauvais, or, at least, his story has been taken from that of S. Justus (18 Oct.). F. 1 Aug., Rom. Mart.; at Paris, dp. 9 Aug.—Rams.—P. B.

Justus, M., at Novalesse. With 90 companions he was killed by Saracens (Lombards?), at Oulx, diocese of Susa, Piedmont, in 906 (726?). Justus and Flavianus are said to have been monks of Novalesse. Their acts are unreliable. The body of S. Justus was found in 1027 and a monastery built in his honor at Susa. His existence is a historical fact, all the rest of his story is apocryphal. He is not identical with S. Justus of Beauvais. Under his invocation, in 1050, a Congregation of Canons Regular was founded at Oulx. F. 17 Oct. At Susa (principal patron) dp. 1 cl.—H. L.—P. B.

Justus, C., 4th Archbp. of Canterbury. He was a Roman by birth; probably a monk in S. Andrew's on the Celian Hill, Rome. One of the second band of missionaries, he was sent with Mellitus, Paulinus, and Reginianus, by Gregory I (601) to aid S. Augustine and to reinforce his mission. In 604, he was consecrated first bishop of Rochester. When, after the death of S. Ethelbert, a pagan reaction set in, he, with S. Mellitus of Essex, retired to France, but returned upon the conversion of King Eadbald. In 624, he succeeded S. Mellitus as metropolitan. He sent S. Paulinus to Northumbria; d. in 627, and was buried in S. Augustine's abbey church. F. 10 Nov., Rom. Mart.; dp. in all England.—St.—Rams.—Angl.

Juvenalis, patriarch of Jerusalem, after 421. His attempts to make the venerable Church of Jerusalem independent of Caesarea and Antioch, and to establish a primatial see there, were opposed by S. Cyril of Alexandria and Pope S. Leo I. He was a partisan of Eutyches at the robber synod of Ephesus, in 449, but recanted at Chalcedon (451), where he formulated the dogmatic resolutions. The Monophysite monks of Palestine drove him from Jerusalem, but he was restored by Emperor Marcianus through the Comes Dorotheus, in 452; the same year S. Leo I acknowledged the patriarchate of Jerusalem. Juvenal d. 3 May, 458. F. 2 July in some dioceses of the Greek Church. 2 July is the Feast of the veil (or the coffin) of Mary, which he is believed to have found and to have transferred to Constantinople.—W. W.—C. E.—Biogr.

Juvenalis Ancina (John Juvenal) (B.), Bp., C. B. at Fossano in Piedmont, 19 Oct., 1545. He studied philosophy and medicine at Montpellier and Mondovi; at Rome S. Philip Neri induced him to join the Oratory (1 Oct., 1580), after he had practiced medicine and filled a professor's chair at Turin. He founded the Oratory at Naples; in 1602, he was preconized bishop of Saluzzo; d. at Saluzzo, 31 Aug., 1604. Beatified, 9 Feb., 1890. F. 31 Aug. dp. maj. at Saluzzo, Fossano, and Mondovi.—H. L.—Seeb., 420.

Kanten (Cannen), C., a Welsh saint, the founder of Llangentan Abbey, Brecknock. F. 5 Nov.—Rams.

Kanute (Knud) Lavard (Lord), M., duke of Sleswig, son of Eric the Good (king of Denmark); he was educated at the court of Duke Lothar of Saxony (later on Emperor); he was chivalrous and just, a pioneer of European civilization amongst the Slavs of the Northwest. He was killed through jealousy by his nephew Magnus Nielsen, 7 Jan., 1131. Canonized in 1170. His feast, 7 Jan., was a holyday of obligation in Denmark before the Reformation. Tr. rel. 25 June in all Denmark.—H. L.—L. S.

Kanute (Knud), M., king of Denmark, 1080–86, the son of Sweyn, King of Denmark and great nephew of Kanut, King of England. He was a strong ruler, a zealous and ascetic Christian; he promoted the authority and influence of the clergy, built churches, enforced the observance of the precepts of the Church, and introduced the tithes. He thoroughly established the Christian religion in Denmark and propagated it through the Baltic provinces of Kurland and Livonia. He married Alice of Flanders and had by her a son, Bl. Charles the Good, count of Flanders. One of his enterprises, which, however, failed, was the fitting out of a fleet to free the Anglo-Saxons from the Norman yoke. The tithe regulations and the injustice of subaltern officers provoked a revolt which spread over Jutland and Fuenen and cost the king's life, in S. Alban's church at Odensee, 10 July, 1086. He was canonized in 1101. F. 7 and 19 Jan. (true date: 10 July); in the Latin Church simpl. 19 Jan. (since 10 Aug., 1670. The date of his feast in the Rom. Mart. has been confounded with that of S. Kanut Lavard); in the Northern missions, dp. 2 cl. In Denmark during the Middle Ages, 10 July; Tr. rel., 19 Apr.—P. B.—H. L.—L. S.—Rams.—Dict.

Kenneth (Cennyd), abbot, one of the most popular Irish saints honored in Scotland. Having become a monk, he passed over to Wales and attached himself to S. Cadoc; after a pilgrimage to Rome he returned to Ireland to become a disciple of S. Mobhi and S. Finnian. In Scotland he founded St. Andrew's, accompanied S. Columbcille to Inverness to convert King Brude. He died in 599, in Ireland, where he had founded Aghaboe monastery. Barr. 135. F. 11 Oct. and 6 Aug. He is identical with S. Caineach or Kenny (Canice).

Kennocha, V., at Coila, Scotland; d. in 1007. F. 10 March. (25 March).—O'H., III, 294.—Rams.

Kentigern (Cyndeirn), called S. Mungo (Darling), C., Bp. of Glasgow, Scotland; b. at Culros, Scotland, about 518; his father was the young prince Owain, his mother, Thenaw, was a daughter of Prince Lleuddun; that he was raised by S. Serf seems to be an anachronism. He began his missionary labors at Cathures, on the Clyde, on the site of the modern city of Glasgow. The Christian king of Strathclyde, Rhydderch Hael, welcomed the saint and procured his consecration as bishop of the Strathclyde Britons, about 540. For 13 years he labored in the district, leading a most austere life in a cell at the confluence of the Clyde and the Molendinar. A large community grew up around him, which became known as Glasgu (dear family), and ultimately grew into the town of Glasgow. About 553, a pagan reaction compelled Kentigern to leave this district; he preached about Carlisle, sojourned for a time with S. David at Menevia, and afterwards founded the monastery of Llanelwy (St. Asaph's). When, in 573, the victory of Arthuret secured the triumph of the Christian cause in Cumbria, Rhydderch recalled S. Kentigern. For eight years he fixed his see at Hoddam in Dumfriesshire, evangelizing also the districts of Galloway and Cumberland. In 481 he returned to Glasgow and here, about 583, was visited by S. Columbcille; d. 13 Jan., 603, and was buried where the cathedral of Glasgow now stands. F. 13 Jan.; now in Scotland 14 Jan. dp. 2 cl.; at Glasgow (principal patron) dp. 1 cl. oct.—Moran, 142.—P. B.—Ftpr., 13, 185.

Kentigerna, matron and recluse in Scotland; b. in Ireland of the Leinster royal family, sister of S. Comgan of Turreff, wife of the chieftain Feredach, mother of S. Foillan (9 Jan.); she retired to Inchelroiche isle, in Lake Lomond, Scotland; d. about 728. F. 7 Feb.—O'H., I, 94.

Kenwyn = S. Keyne (Ceneu Cainwyryf or Cain the Virgin), daughter (granddaughter?) of S. Brychan; to her was dedicated a chapel in the parish of S. Kea, Cornwall, in 1259. F. 8 Oct.

Kephas (Galat. II, 11, different from S. Peter), Bp. of Konia or Colonia; he was thrown into the sea at Rhodus or stoned at Antioch, after he had preached the Gospel at Baalbek, Emesa (Syria), and in the Natron desert (Egypt). He is buried at Sarmi (Kuramah).—Scherma., 339.

Ketevan, M., queen of Kakheti in Georgia (Caucasus); she was a Catholic, the mother of King Theimuraz, was brought to Shiras in Persia by order of Shah Abbas II, and died in prison, assisted by Carmelite Fathers, 22 Sept., 1624. F. 13 Sept.—Mrt.—Bess.—Tam., 482.

Ketill = S. Kjeld, C., 11 July.

Kevern, abbot = S. Gobrian.

Kevin (Coemgen), abbot of Glendalough, Wicklow, Ireland; b. in 498, son of Coimlugh, of the royal race of Leinster. He was baptized by S. Cronan and educated by S. Petrock, a Briton; for a while he attached himself to Ss. Eoghain, Lochan and Enna, then he lived as a hermit at Lough Tay, Wicklow. Subsequently he founded the famous monastery of Glendalough (valley of the two lakes). Having firmly established this community, he retired into solitude for four years and only returned to Glendalough at the earnest entreaty of his monks. He was probably never a bishop; d. in 618. F. 3 June dp. in all Ireland; dp. 1 cl. oct. (principal patron) at Dublin. Cult approved, 17 June, 1903.—Chr. Leg., 22 to 34.—Con., 312.—Ins., 424.

Kieran (Ciaran), of Cluain-Sosta or Clonsat, King's Co., Ireland. F. 30 Apr.—O'H., IV, 567.

Kieran (Ciaran, Piran), a pre-Patrician missionary, styled the first-born of the saints of Ireland, bishop and abbot of Saighir, Ireland; b. of noble Ossorian parents in exile at Inis Cliar (Clear Island), the southernmost point of Ireland, about 446; he came to Cornwall when a young man (476) and was baptized there. He returned in 479, and met S. Patrick at the court of Aengus, at Cashel; in 480, he founded Saighir monastery in Ossory, King's Co., and was consecrated bishop by S. Patrick. To make room at Saighir for Carthagh, the son of King Aengus, Kieran crossed to Cornwall (491), where he lived in solitude at Perranzaguloe; d. about 530. In Cornwall he is called S. Piran and is patron of miners. Irish writers deny his journey to Cornwall. He is patron of the diocese of Ossory. F. 5 March.—B. G., II, 119 and IV, 105.—O'H., III, 115.

Kieran McColge, an Irish saint. F. 19 May.—O'H., V, 510.

Kilian (Killian, Coelan, Chillen, Cillene), C., probably of Achadhcaill, on the banks of the Dundrum estuary. F. 19 Apr.—O'H., IV, 241.

Kilian (bishop), Colman (priest), and Totan (deacon), Mm. They left Ireland in 686 to lead an ascetic life in solitude and settled in the forest near Würzburg on the Main, in Franconia. There they converted Duke Gozbert, and when they saw that there was an opening for missionary work in Franconia, they went to Rome to obtain for their undertaking the authority of the Apostolic See (fall 686). Perhaps it was at Rome, and not in Ireland, where Kilian was consecrated bishop. When they returned to Franconia (in the spring of 689) they were killed, 8 July, 689, at the instigation of Geilana, the wife of Gozbert, who was his brother's widow. S. Kilian had induced Duke Gozbert to dismiss Geilana, according to the matrimonial laws of the Church. S. Kilian is called "the Apostle of Franconia," although his missionary career extended only over a few months. His relics were found, in 725, by S. Burkard; they rest in Newminster Church at Würzburg. Lambert (Lantbert,) Bp. of Maestricht, M.; b. about 636 at Maestricht; he was a disciple of S. Landoald and S. Theodard, bishop of Maestricht, whom he succeeded, in 670. When his friend, King Childeric II, was murdered, Lambert was banished to Stavelot monastery (675) by Ebroin, but reinstated by Pepin of Heristal (681). He reformed his disintegrated diocese with great zeal and evangelized Kempenland and the pagan Taxanders in Brabant. He also descended the Meuse as far as Tiel, laboring together with S. Willibrord. S. Landrada aided him to found the monastery of Münster-Bilsen. He was killed, 17 Sept., c. 708, at the tomb of S. Theodard in Liège, by Dodo, an attendant on Pepin of Heristal, because Lambert's relatives had killed Gall and Reinhold for invading the Bishop's lands. A later account claims that Dodo was a brother of Alpais, the mother of Charles Martel, and that he killed S. Lambert because he had rebuked Pepin for his adulterous connection with Alpais. Lambert was pierced by a javelin whilst praying before the altar. His servants brought his body to Maestricht; about 720, it was brought back to Liège by S. Hubert. Lawrence, M., at Carthage; v. S. Celerina, 3 Feb.

Lawrence, the Syrian, called "Illuminator," because he restored eye-sight to the blind; he was elected bishop of Sabina (Foronovo) in 550; bishop of Spoleto, 552-63. He was a Syrian and, when still a layman, came to Rome with many companions, during the Monophysite disturbances, under Pope Hormisdas; ordained priest, he lived with other clerics, first on the lake of Piè di Luco in Umbria; consecrated bishop, about 559, he resided at Spoleto (563). He founded the abbey of Farfa. D. 3 Feb., 586, perhaps at Piè di Luco. F. 3 Feb. at Spoleto; 8 July at Sabina and Farfa dp.—Off. pr.—H. L.

Lawrence Majoranus, C., Bp. of Siponto; he was designated for the see of Siponto by Emperor Zeno, his relative, in 488, and consecrated by Pope Gelasius, in 492. He built the sanctuary of S. Michael on Mt. Gargano and induced King Totila to spare Siponto; d. about 546. F. 7 Feb. at Manfredonia (principal patron of the city and archdiocese) dp. 1 cl. oct. Tr. rel. 30 Oct., dp. maj.—H. L.

Lawrence, second Archbp. of Canterbury, C. He probably was a monk in St. Andrew's on the Celian Hill, Rome, and one of the forty religious sent by Pope St. Gregory the Great to England with St. Augustine, to convert the Anglo-Saxons. He enjoyed the full confidence of his holy leader and was chosen by him to report to St. Gregory on the progress of the English mission and to bring back reinforcements for the work. He was consecrated by St. Augustine, April 26, 604, and succeeded him a month later. He guided the infant Church successfully and skilfully through the crisis of pagan reaction that followed on the death of King Ethelbert (616) and succeeded in converting Eadbald, the son of Ethelbert. He endeavored to introduce the Roman usages in place of the Celto-British customs and rites, but appears to have dealt very prudently with the Celtic prelates. D. 2 Feb., 619, and was buried in St. Augustine's at Canterbury. The Irish Stowe Missal gives him express commemoration in the Canon of the Mass. F. 2 Feb., Rom. Mart., 3 Feb. dp. in all England.—St.—L. S.—Rams.—Angl.—Hamp.

Lawrence, M., in Africa; v. S. Mammarius, 10 June.

Lawrence of Brindisi (Cesare de Rossi), C., General of the Capuchins; b. at Brindisi in Southern Italy, 22 July, 1559; he took the Capuchin habit, 15 Feb., 1575, and finished his studies at Padua. He mastered many languages: Italian, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, German, Bohemian, French, and Spanish, and knew the entire Scriptures by heart. From 1596 to 1602 he was Definitor General at Rome, where he converted many Jews; in 1602, he was elected Vicar General of the Capuchins; as such he visited the various provinces of his Order, but refused to accept the office a second time. In 1601, he was appointed military chaplain of the imperial army in the wars against the Turks; he was the soul of the Christian army, especially at the battles of Stuhlweissenburg (11 Oct., 1601) and of Tzhokaki (14 Oct., 1601); he saved Christian Europe from the Crescent. In 1605, he was sent to evangelize Germany and to induce Philip III of Spain to join the "Catholic League." He was in great favor with the courts of Bavaria, Austria, and Spain, and was employed on the most important diplomatic missions. On a second mission to the court of Spain, he died at Lisbon on his birthday, 22 July, 1619. Beatified, 1783, canonized, 8 Dec., 1881. F. 22 July by the three families of S. Francis; dp. maj. at Lisbon, Brindisi, Piazza, etc.—Germ. S. 75—Seeb. 319—H. L.

Lawrence Litta, C., Bp. of Milan; a friend of S. Ennodius; in April, 485, he succeeded Bishop Theodore; he rendered splendid services to Pope Symmachus in the Laurentian schism (502). D. 25 July, 512. Ennodius preached his panegyric. F. 27 July.—H. L.

Lawrence (Laurentius), deacon and M. at Rome, the most celebrated victim of the persecution under Valerian and the most popular of the many martyrs of Rome; d. 10 Aug., 258, three days after Pope Sixtus II. According to tradition, he was a native of Spain, was received amongst the seven deacons of the Roman Church and nominated archdeacon: He distributed alms from the house of S. Cyriaca (S. M. in Domnica). When S. Sixtus with most of his clergy was put to death under Valerian, St. Lawrence was spared for a few days with the view of forcing him to disclose and give up the supposed concealed treasures of the Church. When, instead of the treasures, he brought before the Judge the poor of the city, the holy deacon was sentenced to be broiled on a gridiron over a slow fire (at the site of S. Lawrence in Panisperna). He was buried on the road to Tivoli in the cemetery of S. Cyriaca. The meeting between S. Lawrence and Pope Sixtus, as described by S. Ambrose, is a poetical fiction and not compatible with the contemporaneous reports about the persecution of Valerian. Also the manner of his execution gives rise to grave doubts. In the 4th century popular legends seem to have grown about this highly venerated Roman deacon, which were committed to writing by S. Ambrose and Prudentius. About 330, a church was built over his tomb (San Lorenzo fuori le Mura), which afterwards became one of the seven principal churches of the city. The tomb of S. Lawrence was opened by Pelagius II to receive the body of S. Stephen, the Protomartyr. His head is in the Quirinal Chapel, his gridiron in San Lorenzo in Lucina. He is patron of the poor, of cooks, against fire and lumbago. F. 10 Aug., Rom. Mart.; in the Latin Church dp. 2 cl. oct. (very ancient); also in the Greek and Syrian Churches, full office. He is titular of the cathedrals of Genoa, Perugia, Cortona, Kulm, and of the palace of the Spanish kings, called Escorial. His name is in the Roman Canon of the Mass. Lawrence, M.; v. S. Diomedes, 28 Aug.

Lawrence Giustiniani, first Patriarch of Venice, C.; b. at Venice, in 1381, a scion of the noble house of the Giustiniani; in 1400, he was given a secular canonry in S. George, Alga island, opposite Venice. In 1406, he was elected prior and first General of the Congregation of Secular Canons of S. George in Alga, to whom he gave a special constitution. 5 Sept., 1433, he was consecrated bishop of Olivolo-Castello; in 1451, he was transferred to the patriarchate of Grado, after the see of Castello had been united with Grado; at the same time the see of Grado was transferred to Venice; thus S. Lawrence became the first Patriarch of Venice. Most austere towards himself, he was a true father to the poor. His writings on mystical contemplation are sublime in their simplicity. D. 8 Jan., 1455; he was beatified in 1524 and canonized in 1690. F. 8 Jan. and 5 Sept., Rom. Mart.; in the Latin Church (since 1692) 5 Sept. (anniversary of his consecration) sem.; at Venice 8 Jan. Lawrence, M., in Africa; v. S. Martialis, 28 Sept.

Lawrence O'Toole (Lorcan O'Tuathal), Bp., C., the youngest son of Murtough, prince of Imaly (Wicklow); when 12 years old, he was given as hostage to Dermot McMurrough, king of Leinster. He was educated at Glendalough, where he took the religious habit (Reg. Can. S. Aug.) and was chosen abbot. In 1162, he was elected archbishop of Dublin. He guided his flock wisely, encouraging them to patience in the sufferings consequent on the invasion of Strongbow. In 1171, he united the Irish princes under Roderic O'Connor to besiege Strongbow at Dublin, but after the defeat of the Irish on the Liffey submitted to King Henry II. Repairing in the interests of his church to Canterbury, to King Henry II, he narrowly escaped death at the hands of a madman. In 1179, he was present at Rome at the third Lateran Council and was appointed Apostolic Legate for Ireland during the period of reconstruction. Having incurred the displeasure of Henry II at a conference in England, he fled to Normandy and died at Eu, 14 Nov., 1180. He was canonized in 1226, by Honorius III, who put on record, among the miracles wrought by the intercession of S. Lawrence, the raising of seven dead persons to life. F. 14 Nov., Rom. Lazarus of Bethany, brother of Mary and Martha, friend of Jesus, whose hospitality the Lord often enjoyed. St. John who was doubtless an eye witness, relates (c. XI), his resuscitation, four days after his death—the great miracle which excited the wrath of Christ's enemies so that they resolved to kill him. According to the Greek tradition, he was, after the Ascension of Christ, placed by the Jews in a leaky boat at Joppe, with his two sisters and other companions, and committed to the mercy of the winds and waves. The Cypriots claim that he was wafted to their shores, near Kition, and was consecrated first bishop of that town by all the Apostles on the occasion of their alleged visit. At Kition, he eventually died and was buried after presiding over the see for thirty years. In 890, his relics were brought to Constantinople. F. in the Greek Church; Tr. rel. from Kition, 17 Oct., and again with Mary, 4 May. MGr.—The legend that Lazarus and his companions came to Marseilles, that he was the first bishop of Marseilles and evangelized the Provence, is an apocryphal invention of the 11th or 12th century. Lazarus, the friend of Jesus, was confounded with another Lazarus, bishop of Aix (consecrated in 407, who spent some time in Palestine, after 411), or with Nazarius, bishop of Autun. Leander, Archbp. of Seville; b. at Cartagena, Spain, an elder brother of Ss. Isidore, Fulgentius of Ecija and Florentina; he took the Benedictine habit at Seville; in 579 he was elected bishop of Seville; between 579 and 582 he was exiled by King Leovigild for his influence upon the conversion from Arianism of S. Hermenegild. He went to Constantinople, where he formed a friendship with S. Gregory (later on Pope Gregory I); in 584, he returned to Spain, but was exiled with Fulgentius and other bishops after the death of S. Hermenegild (586); recalled the following year by Leovigild, he became the head and soul of the national synods of Toledo (589 and 590); in 599, he received the pallium from Gregory the Great. He was a gifted orator, eminent for his knowledge and the sanctity of his life. He reformed the Spanish liturgy and under God was the chief means of converting the Spanish Visigoths from the errors of Arianism. D. 13 March c. 600. F. 27 Feb. Rom. Leo I, the Great, Pope, C., and Doctor of the Church. He was probably a native of Tuscany. His pontificate, after that of Gregory I, is the most important in Christian antiquity. At a time when the Church was experiencing the greatest obstacles in consequence of the disintegration of the Western Empire, while the Orient was deeply agitated over dogmatic controversies, this great Pontiff, with far-seeing sagacity and a powerful hand, guided the destinies of the Church. He was archdeacon under Celestine I and Sixtus III. Whilst on a diplomatic mission in Gaul, he was elected to fill the see of S. Peter and was consecrated, 29 Sept., 440. He combated the Pelagians and Manicheans in Italy and the Priscillianists in Spain; regulated the hierarchy in Africa, Gaul, and Illyria, where he confirmed Anastasius of Thessalonica as Apostolic Vicar, but also protected the bishops against the latter's encroachments. He condemned Monophysitism, rejected the appeal of Eutyches, and, in his dogmatical letter to S. Flavianus, defined the doctrine of the natures of Christ. In the Eastern Empire he maintained the union with Rome and appointed a stationary ambassador (apocrisarius) for Constantinople; he directed the ecumenical Council of Chalcedon by his delegates, but rejected the 28th canon, which unduly extended the power of the Patriarch of Constantinople. Courageously and successfully he opposed the barbarians, who invaded Italy, induced Attila to return to the East, and Geiseric to desist from destroying the city; the pillage of Rome, however, lasted two weeks and many thousand Romans were carried off as slaves (456).

The Sacramentary ascribed to him is not genuine; more than a hundred of his eloquent sermons are still extant. D. at Rome, 10 Nov., 461. His relics are in the Vatican Basilica. In 1754 Benedict XIV raised him to the dignity of a Doctor of the Church. F. 11 Apr. (elevation of relics under Sergius I), Rom. Leo IX, C., O. S. B., Pope, 12 Feb. 1049-1054. His secular name was Bruno of Dagsburg; b. at Egisheim, Alsace (Dabo, Meurthe), 21 June, 1002. He was educated for the clerical state by Bishop Bertold and was consecrated bishop of Toul, 9 Sept., 1027. He introduced the reform of Cluny into the monasteries of his diocese. Against the Burgundian claims he was a firm partisan of his cousin, Emperor Conrad, and of Henry III, who, at the diet of Worms, in Dec., 1048, designated him Pope (Damasus II had died 9 Aug., 1048), whilst the Romans favored Bruno's friend, Bishop Halinard of Lyons. Bruno would not accept the dignity except on condition that he be elected by the Cardinals at Rome. Accompanied by Hildebrand, he went to Rome and was elected at S. Peter's, 12 Feb., 1049. He immediately took up the reform of discipline, held synods at the Lateran, Pavia, Reims, and Mayence, issued decrees against simony, lay investiture, and concubinage; he called to his side strong men like Hildebrand and Humbert, thereby reforming the College of Cardinals which up to that time had consisted almost exclusively of Italians. He condemned Berengar at Vercelli and visited Henry III in Germany. Urged by the Greeks and Southern Italians, he started the fatal war against the Normans of Lower Italy (1052), lost the battle of Civitella, 18 June, 1053, and was imprisoned. He fell sick in his confinement, and the Normans were willing to release the dying man. On the 12th of March he left Benevento, but was obliged to rest twelve days at Capua; soon after his arrival at Rome he died, 19 Apr., 1054. Under his pontificate the lasting separation of the Greek Church from Rome was effected; he died, before his Legate, who had excommunicated Michael Caerularius (16 July 1054), had returned from Constantinople. Zeal, enthusiasm for truth and righteousness, were the distinguishing features of his character, and it is impossible to overrate the advantage to the Church and to the Holy See of the brief rule of this admirable pontiff. Leo III, O. S. B., Pope, 27 Dec. 795-816. He was a native of Rome, ordained priest on the title of S. Susanna and chief of the pontifical treasury. In 798, he raised Cologne and Salzburg to the dignity of metropolitan sees, and in 799, condemned the Adoptianist Felix of Urgel; the same year he was attacked by the partisans of Hadrian I during a procession (25 Apr.), was maltreated, imprisoned, and deposed for alleged crimes. But Leo escaped and fled, first to Spoleto, then to Charlemagne, who received him with great honors at Paderborn and had him escorted to Rome by Frankish nobles. When Charlemagne came to Rome, in 800, Leo by an oath purged himself of the crimes imputed to him, and, on Christmas day, anointed and crowned Charlemagne, thus founding the Western Empire. The Pope swore allegiance to him, not obedience; the Roman people swore allegiance to both Pope and Emperor; Leo remained ruler in the Patrimony of S. Peter, under Frankish sovereignty; Charlemagne was his protector and defender. The idea that Leo transferred the Imperium from the Greeks to the Franks, dates from a later period. Not to offend the Greeks, Leo refused to insert the "Filioque" into the Nicene Creed, although Charlemagne, by a delegation, asked him to do so. In the Moechist quarrel he supported S. Theodore of Studion against the Patriarch Nicephorus of Constantinople. He commenced to build the Città Leonina at Rome. D. 12 June, 816; his relics are in the chapel of the

Leo II, C., Pope, 17 Aug. 682-83; b. at Messina (or Aidone?) in Sicily. After an interregnum of 11 months, he was elected, in Dec., 681, but consecrated only after he had notified Emperor Constantine Pogonatus of his election. He confirmed the sixth ecumenical Council (of Constantinople), also the anathema against Pope Honorius, under the restriction that "by negligence he allowed the Church to be defiled by heresy." He would not allow that Honorius himself had fallen into error. Learned and mild, eloquent and prudent, he was friendly to the Orient, built S. George's church for the Greeks in Rome, and put an end to the schism of Ravenna. D. 3 July, 683, and was buried in S. Peter's, 28 June, 684. His relics are in the chapel of S. M. della Colonna in the Vatican Basilica; some relics at Ferrara. F. 28 June, Rom. Mart. S. Leo IV, O. S. B., C., Pope, 10 Apr. 847-55. He was a Roman and a monk at S. Martino, Rome, the greatest character of his age, a man of apostolic patience and humility, liberality and justice. When elected, he was cardinal of the title of the Quattro Coronati. After the invasion of the Saracens (846) he protected Rome by walls and towers and finished the new quarter near S. Peter's (Città Leonina), commenced by Leo III. In 949, he won a great naval victory over Saracen pirates near Ostia, built the new seaport of Centumcellae (Leopolis), made a treaty with Emperors Lothar and Louis II (whom he crowned in 850), by which the election of a Pope should always be held according to canonical laws. He respected the imperial jurisdiction in Rome, but opposed the pretensions of Hinkmar of Reims. He held four synods at Rome and restored or built several of the Roman churches: S. Peter's, Quattro Coronati, St. Martin's, and S. M. Nova. He also (853) crowned Alfred king of England. D. 17 July, 855. Leocadia, V., M., at Toledo. She was arrested and scourged by order of the Prefect Dacianus; a few days later she died in prison (9 Dec., 303). Her cult is ancient, although Prudentius does not mention her in his hymn on the Spanish martyrs. Her relics were brought by the Gothic kings to her own church, in which the fourth synod of Toledo was held (633). That S. Leocadia rose from her tomb during one of the sessions of the synod to defend the virginity of Mary, is fiction. In the 8th century her body was brought to Oviedo, from there to St-Ghislain, diocese of Cambrai; in 1587, the relics were restored to Toledo. Leodegar (Léger), M., Bp. of Autun; d. about 616; educated at the court of Clotaire

II, later on by his uncle, Bishop Dodo of Poitiers, who made him his archdeacon. In 653, he was elected abbot of St-Maixent, Poitiers, where he introduced the Benedictine rule. In 656, he was nominated rector of the palace and, in 659, designated bishop of Autun by the mediation of S. Bathildis. Compelled by necessity he interfered in the sad political affairs of his time and, consequently, shared in their vicissitudes: at Easter, 675, he was exiled to Autun, but soon after was deposed by Thierry III, and, when Autun fell into the hands of Ebroin, the odious majordomo of Thierry III, cruelly blinded and incarcerated; his tongue and lips were cut; at last he was degraded and, a few days later, beheaded in the forest of Sarcing (Somme), 2 Oct., 678. His relics are now at Ebreuil (St-Léger). F. 2 Oct., Rom. Mart.; at Autun, 3 Oct. dp.; at Lucerne, in the collegiate church, 2 Oct. dp. 1 cl. oct.; 25 Aug. the Blinding of S. Leonard of Port Maurice, C., O. F. M., a missionary and ascetic writer; b. at Porto Maurizio, Liguria, on the Gulf of Genoa, 20 Dec., 1676; after splendid studies in the Roman College, he took the habit of S. Francis at the Riformella (an offshot of the Riformati), 2 Oct., 1697; after his ordination he gave all his efforts to missionary work. Compelled by vomiting of blood, he retired to his home town on the Riviera and spent five years in prayer. In 1707, he commenced his activity as a missionary and popular preacher at Florence. Fully 44 years he labored successfully in Italy, especially in Tuscany. He promoted the devotion to the Sacred Heart, the perpetual adoration of the Bl. Sacrament and the Way of the Cross, which he enacted at Rome in the Coliseum; he erected 571 other stations in Italy. He advocated the definition of the Immaculate Conception of the B. V. Mary by letters, sermons, etc. His writings fill 13 volumes. Called to Rome by Benedict XIV, he died the night after his arrival, 26 Nov., 1751, in the retreat of S. Bonaventure on the Palatine. Leopold IV, Markgrave of Austria, C., surnamed "The Pious." B. at Melk, 29 Sept., 1073, and educated by S. Altmann of Passau; in 1096, he succeeded his father, Leopold III; in 1106, he married Agnes, daughter of the Emperor Henry IV; he had 18 children by his wife, two of whom became famous bishops: Otto of Freising and Conrad of Salzburg. There is not sufficient contemporary evidence as to the sanctity of the life of S. Leopold; later biographies are of little value. In 1127, he built the Cistercian abbey of the Holy Cross, then the Augustinian abbey of Klosterneuburg, and, finally, the Benedictine house of Klein-Maria-Zell. Twice he defeated the Hungarians, who troubled the peace of the country. He supported Henry IV against his son Henry V, until, in 1105, he became the latter's brother-in-law. When Henry V died, in 1125, the Bavarians endeavored to obtain the imperial crown for Leopold, but failed, partly because he refused to accept the nomination; d. 15 Nov., 1136. Canonized in 1485. Liberata or Wilgefortis (Virgo Fortis), V., M., a mythical saint. According to a fictitious legend, she was a sister of Ss. Genivera, Victoria, Eumelia, Germana, Gemma, Martia, Basilissa, and Quiteria, daughter of the prefect of Galicia (Spain), Lucius Catellus Severus, and his wife Calsia (all nine from one birth!); b. at Balchagia (Tuy); during the persecution they fled to various places, but all suffered martyrdom. Her father wanted to marry Liberata to the "King of Sicily," but the girl, having taken the vow of virginity, asked Christ to help her, whereupon a beard and moustache grew in her face. The bridegroom rejected her, but her father, in a fit of rage, had her crucified at Castroleuca in Portugal, c. 139. Her body is venerated at Sigüenza, Spain, since 1300; other relics are at Brussels. In England she is called "Uncumber," in Belgium "Ontkommene," in Germany "Wilgefortis" or "Kümmernis," in Gascony "Ste. Livrade." According to her legend, all who are mindful of her passion will be delivered from all encumbrances and troubles. Her story is a worthless religious romance; it probably grew out of devotion for the picture of the celebrated crucifix (Volto Santo) of Lucca; even her existence may be disputed. The relics which bear the name of S. Liberata were brought to Sigüenza, July 16, 1557, from an unknown place; her lessons, in 1561, were changed according to the spurious account of Pseudo-Dexter. In the beginning of the 18th century a heated controversy was carried on between hagiographers on the personality of S. Liberata. Chev. F. 20 July, Rom. Mart.; at Sigüenza (princ. patr.) d. 1 cl. oct.; dp. at Tuy. Liberata is minor patron of the republic of Columbia, dp. maj. At Sigüenza Tr. rel. 24 July dp. maj.—L. S.—P. B.—W.W.—Buch.

Liberius (Oliverius, Liberatus), "the Pilgrim," C. He may have been the son of the Catholic King Haytho of Armenia (c. 1270) who died at Ancona during a pilgrimage. He is secondary patron of Ancona. The apocryphal acts treat as contemporaries the Four Crowned Martyrs, Attila (of 521), and S. Gregory (of 604) the Great. F. 27 May dp. 2 cl. at Ancona.—Comm.—P. B.

Liberius, second bishop of Poitiers known to history; after the persecution of Diocletian. F. 19 July dp. maj. at Poitiers and Lugon.—P. B.

Liberius, C., Pope, 17 May, 352–66. He was a native of Rome. During his pontificate the waves of the Arian controversy went high: at a Roman synod he took the part of S. Athanasius and tried to induce the Emperor Constantius to call an ecumenical council to Aquileja. When the Emperor held a synod at Arles (in 353), Liberius assembled another at Milan; both proved unsatisfactory, but Liberius steadfastly refused to condemn Athanasius and to enter into communion with his adversaries. Therefore the Emperor exiled Liberius to Beroea; in his stead Felix II was appointed bishop of Rome. Only when Liberius consented to the third Sirmian formulary (after the express declaration that the Son was equal to the Father in everything), was he allowed to return to Rome (358). In 363 he offered pardon to the bishops of the synod of Rimini (358) if they would renounce Arianism; in consequence he entered into communion with 59 bishops in the East, a measure which was bitterly opposed by rigorists. Later apocryphal accounts accuse him of Arianism. D. 23 Sept., 366. (v. C. E., IX, 216). F. 23 Sept., Hier. Mart. The Roman Church does not honor him as a saint, the first in the long list of ancient popes who was not canonized. In the Greek Church he has the full office of 27 Aug.; in Copt. Cal. 6 Oct.—Syn., 61.—C. E.—Buch.—W.W.

Louis IX, king of France, C., son of King Louis VIII and Blanche of Castile; b. at Poissy, 25 Apr., 1215; when eleven years old, he was proclaimed king of France; he ruled the country up to 1236 under the guardianship and, later on, under the wise influence, of his saintly and energetic mother. He was deeply religious, an ascete on the throne, a model Christian ruler, mild, just, and chivalrous; he limited the rights of feuds and judicial duels (1260) and substituted for them proof by witnesses and contradictory process, thereby revolutionizing the French administration of justice. By granting the right of appeal from the baronial courts to the crown he strengthened the authority of the royal tribunal. He was a friend of the clergy, especially of the Mendicant Orders; he endowed pious foundations, built the Royal Chapel, to keep the relics of the True Cross, the Crown of Thorns, etc., at Paris. He supported the Church in carrying out her synodal decrees, took vigorous steps against abuses, and defended the rights of the Crown against the bishops. He also united his efforts with those of the Popes to rescue the clergy of France from the encroachments of the barons and royal officers. In 1248, he undertook a crusade and conquered Damiette (7 June, 1249), but was taken prisoner, 6 Apr., 1250; having paid the required ransom, he sailed to Acon with the rest of his army and visited the Holy Places. After his mother's death (1254) he returned to France. In 1270, he led a new crusade to Tunis, but died of dysentery, in camp, near Tunis, 25 Aug., 1270. His relics were buried at St-Denis, 22 May, 1271, but were destroyed by the revolutionists in 1793. His head was brought to the Royal Chapel, 17 May, 1306. He was canonized by Boniface VIII, 11 Aug., 1297. He is patron of barbers, printers, horse traders and stone masons. F. 25 Aug. Rom. Mart. sem. in the Latin Church; at Paris dp. 1 cl.; dp. maj. in all France. Louis of Toulouse, Bp., C.; b. at Brignoles, Provence, in 1274, a great nephew of S. Louis of France and, through his mother, also a great nephew of S. Elizabeth of Hungary. In 1288 he was sent by his father, King Charles II of Naples, as a hostage to Aragon, and remained seven years in Barcelona, making great progress in virtue, science, and theology, under the guidance of two Franciscans. 24 Dec., 1296, he took the habit of S. Francis at Rome. While still in captivity, 7 Oct., 1296, he was appointed by Boniface VIII to take charge of the diocese of Toulouse, and was consecrated at Rome, 29 Dec., 1296. Reluctantly and as the poorest of the poor, he took possession of his see, but did not live long to govern his diocese; he died of fever, after half a year's administration, at Brignoles, 19 Aug., 1297, only 23 years old. He was canonized in 1317. His relics were transferred from the Franciscan church at Marseilles to Valencia, Spain, by Alphonso V. F. 19 Aug., Rom. Mart. His feast was first instituted for the Franciscans of Marseilles after his canonization, 7 Apr., 1317. The rythmical office was composed by his brother, King Robert of Naples. F. at Valencia, Toulouse and O. F. M. dp. maj., 19 Aug. dp. at Lucera. Tr. rel. 10 Nov. He is Pmp. of Perugia and of Cuneo.—P. B.—Auss.

Louis Beltran (Bertrand), C., O. P., Apostle of Columbia (Nueva Granada) in South America; b. at Valencia, Spain, 1 Jan., 1526; through his father he was related to S. Vincent Ferrer. Against the will of his parents he took the Dominican habit, in 1544; was ordained priest, in 1547; appointed master of novices, in 1549, vicar of S. Anna de Albayda in 1557 or 1560, and in 1560 or 1562 again master of novices at Valencia. In 1562, he crossed over to South America and gave his efforts to missionary work amongst the native Indians, baptizing 25,000 pagans in Cartagena, Panama, Tubera, Cipacoa, and Paluato, also amongst the Caribs of the Leeward islands. Under obedience he returned to Spain and served as prior of San Onofrio, near Valencia, 1570-73, and as prior of Santo Domingo at Valencia, 1575-78. He is said to have possessed the gift of tongues whilst preaching to the Indians. D. at Valencia, 9 Oct., 1581. Beatified in 1608, canonized in 1671. F. 9 Oct., Rom. Francis at Calvario, Salamanca; after his ordination he was sent to Manila (1601) and Japan (1603); arrested under Daifusama, he was sent to Spain by King Masamune of Ochu (1613); he visited Rome and returned to Japan, in 1622; again arrested at Nagasaki, he was burnt alive at Ximabura, 25 Aug., 1624. Beatified, 6 July, 1867. F. 12 Sept. dp. O. F. M.; at Seville, dp. 11 July.—Jap.

Louis Chakichi (B.), M., a Japanese layman; he released B. Louis Flores from prison at Firando, where he was kept by the Dutch, but was overtaken and burnt alive at Nagasaki, 2 Oct., 1622; his wife and children were beheaded. Beatified, 6 July, 1867.—Jap.

Louis Aleman (B.), Archbp. of Arles and Cardinal, C.; b. in Arrent castle, Bugey, diocese of Belley, about 1390; appointed precentor at Narbonne, 4 Aug., 1409; 22 June, 1418, he was elected bishop of Maguelonne, consecrated at Mantua, 20 Nov. 3 Dec., 1423, he was transferred to Arles and created Cardinal priest of S. Cecilia, 24 May, 1426, and Vice-Camerlengo by Martin V; filled with zeal for the reform of the Church, he was the head of the antipapal party at the council of Basle, which maintained the supremacy of the Council over the Pope; he consecrated and crowned the antipope Felix V, wherefore he was deposed by Eugene IV, 11 Apr., 1440; after the resignation of Felix V, he was reinstated by Nicholas V, 19 Dec., 1449; d. in the odor of sanctity in the Franciscan monastery of Salonne, near Arles, 16 Sept., 1450. His life was one of austere penance. He was beatified by Clement VII, 9 Apr., 1527. F. 17 Sept.; at Aix, 16 Sept.; at Arles dp. 5 Oct.—P. B.—Mg.

Louis III (B.), last count of Arnstein, C.; b. in 1109; he changed Arnstein castle into a Premonstratensian monastery and took the habit of a lay brother at the age of 30 years. After a life of austere asceticism he died, 25 Oct., 1185.—H. L.

Louise (Ludovica) degl' Albertoni, matron, 3rd O. F. M.; b. at Rome, in 1474; after the death of her husband, James de Citara (1507), she took the habit of the third Order of S. Francis of Assisi and devoted her life to works of charity; d. 31 Jan., 1533. Her body is in San Francesco in Ripa. Beatified, 25 Feb., 1671. F. 31 Jan. dp. O. F. M. and in S. M. in Portico, Rome.—Auss.—H. L.

Louise de Marillac (B.), widow, with S. Vincent de Paul, foundress of the Daughters of Charity. B. at Paris, Aug. 12, 1591, she wanted to enter a convent, but upon the advice of her confessor married M. Legras, of whom she had a son. After his death she placed herself under the direction of S. Vincent de Paul and founded a congregation of unclioistered nuns to assist the poor and to establish hospitals. S. Vincent approved the new order, and the first vows were made in 1638. Louise was the superioress to her death, 15 March, 1660. Her cause was introduced 10 June, 1896; she was beatified, 9 May, 1920. F. 15 March dp. 2 cl. by the Lazarists.—C. E.

Louise of Savoy (B.), matron, 2nd O. F. M.; b. in 1462, as a daughter of B. Amadee IX, duke of Savoy; in 1479, she was married to Hugh of Chalon, who died when Louise was 27 years old; she retired to her palace, putting on the habit of St. Clare and practicing works of charity; later on she entered a convent at Orbe and collected the food for the community. D. at Orbe, 24 July, 1503; her relics are at Noseret. Cult approved by Gregory XVI. F. 24 July in Savoy and Piedmont dp.; 18 Feb. at Genoa dp.; 11 Aug. dp. O. F. M.—Seeb., 229.—P. B.

Lucia = S. Lucy.

Lucianus, M., at Lentini, Sicily, about 330. F. 3 Jan. (7 Nov.)—H. L.

Lucianus, M., in Africa; v. S. Felix, 5 Jan.

Lucianus, M., priest and founder of the theological school of Antioch, celebrated for his learning and asceticism. The Arians considered him their first Doctor and he was their principal martyr. The opposition to the allegorizing tendencies of the Alexandrines centered in him; he has the reputation of being the real author of the opinions which afterwards found expression in the heresy of the Arians. The great leaders of the Arian movement, Eusebius of Nicomedia, Maris of Chalcedon, Theognis and Arius himself venerated him as their master. B. at Samosata (?) and educated at Edessa (?) and Cæsarea, he took up his residence at Antioch, where he was ordained priest; he was excommunicated with Paul of Samosata, in 269, but probably returned to the Church before his death. He made a revision of the Septuagint and the New Testament. Under Maximin Daza he was arrested at Antioch, dragged to Nicomedia (304) and kept in prison for nearly nine years. He died of the consequences of torture, 7 Jan., 312, and was buried at Drepanum (Helenopolis). F. 7 Jan. Rom. Mart. (in spite of his Arian tendencies). He had various feasts: 6 Jan. at Heliopolis (Baalbek); 7 Jan. (also 24 Feb. and 26 Oct.) at Nicomedia; at Caesarea (Capp.) 7 June.; at present in the Greek Church full office, 15 Oct.—Ch. Leg., 133.—Ruin., 527—Achel., 119—P. B.

Lucianus, Bp. (?), M., patron of Beauvais. There is much uncertainty about this martyr; probably he came from Rome with St. Denis and was martyred during the persecution of Maximianus Hercules, under the prefect Rictiovarus. According to the fabulous legend of Odo, he was a bishop, sent from Rome with the priest Maximilianus and the deacon Julianus, and martyred under Nero. A church was built over his tomb, which was restored in 583 by Childeric I; his relics were burnt in 1793. F. 8 Jan. Rom. Mart.; at Beauvais dp. 1 cl. oct.; Tr. rel. dp. maj., 16 Oct.—P. B.—Mg.

Lucidus, M. F. 28 July at Diano, Italy. O.

Lucifer, C., Bp. of Cagliari in Sardinia. He was an energetic defender of the Nicene Creed against the Arian Emperor Constantius. Because, in exaggerated language, he resisted the sentence passed against S. Athanasius at Milan, he was exiled with S. Hilarius to Palestine and the Thebaid. Allowed to return by Julian the Apostate, he went to Antioch and, "incapable of tact," meddled in the dissensions of the Catholic party, consecrating the Latin priest Paulinus as patriarch of Antioch. By this rash act he caused the Luciferian schism, the adherents of which refused ecclesiastical communion with any former Arian bishop or priest. He vigorously protested against the indulgence of Eusebius towards the converts from Arianism, anathematized him, and formed a small rigoristic sect. Disgusted he withdrew to Sardinia and died at Cagliari, in 371 (in peace with the Church?). He is venerated as a saint in Sardinia, where several churches are dedicated to him, e. g., at Vallermosa. F. 20 May. Outside of these churches his public cult was prohibited by Urban VIII.—H. Lucilla, M., in Africa; v. S. Maximus, 16 Feb.

Lucilla, Flora, Eugenius, Antoninus, Theodorus, and 18 companions, Mm. According to their unreliable acts, they were martyred at Rome under Gallienus, about 258, and were buried at Ostia; their relics were partially transferred to Arezzo. There is, however, some difficulty in distinguishing them from another group of martyrs, St. Lucy and twenty others, venerated on 25 June. If the two groups are really distinct, the records and names in ancient times must have got mixed; v. also S. Lucy, 6 July. F. 29 July Rom. Mart.—H. L.

Lucillianus, two Greek Mm. of this name, 19 Jan.—Mrt.

Lucillianus, his wife, Paula, and their sons Claudius, Hypatius, Paulus, and Dionysius, Mm., at Constantinople (Byzantium). Lucillianus was a pagan priest at Nicomedia; when he was very old, he was converted and brought many to Christ; reported by the Jews, he was incarcerated with his four sons and tortured at Chalcedon; they were brought to Byzantium, where Lucillianus was crucified and his four sons beheaded. Paula served these martyrs and buried them; at last she also was crucified at Byzantium c. 273. It is very doubtful, however, if the scene of their martyrdom was Byzantium; perhaps they died at Chalcedon or in some town of Thrace and their relics were brought to Constantinople, like the relics of so many other saints.—Thr. Lucius, M., at Carthage; v. S. Montanus, 24 Feb.

Lucius, Bp., Absalon, Lorgius (Largius, Lorius), Herulus (Gerolus), Primitivus, and Januarius, Mm., at Caesarea in Cappadocia. It is doubtful where they suffered martyrdom. As the Spaniards and Portuguese did in many other instances, they appropriated these homeless martyrs to the Iberian peninsula. The Church of Braga in Portugal claims that Lucius was bishop of Britonia, near the present city of Mondenedo, and that his companions were ministers of this church; that they were sent east by Aristobulus, one of the disciples of S. Paul, and were killed at Caesarea in Cappadocia, on their journey. But this story is apocryphal; these martyrs do not belong to Portugal. F. 2 March, MGr.; sem. at Braga.—Off. pr.

Lucius I, M., Pope 25 June, 253 to 5 March, 254; b. at Rome (or in Tuscany?); he was sent into exile soon after his elevation and died at Rome directly after his return. Regarding readmission of the fallen, he followed the policy of S. Cornelius. His relics were transferred from the cemetery of S. Callistus to S. Silvester by Paul I, and to S. Prassede by Paschal I; some relics are in S. Cecilia. His cult is ancient, but was forgotten and restored after the finding of his relics in S. Cecilia, in 1599. F. 2 March, Rom. Lucius, senator, M., from Cyrene in Libya; v. S. Photinus. F. 20 Aug., Rom. Mart. The Menology of Basil, 21 Aug., has the feast of the biblical Lucius of Cyrene (Acts XIII, 1: 6 May) who is celebrated also by the Melchites on 21 Aug. Lucius of 20 Aug., 22 Apr. and of 6 May in Rom. Mart. seem to be identical. The Rom. Mart., however, records the following story: He was a senator or dignitary of Cyrene in Africa, converted to Christianity on witnessing the constancy of Bishop St. Theodore. Lucius himself converted to the faith Dignianus, the governor or magistrate, and in company with him fled to the island of Cyprus, where they were put to Lucius, M., at Rome; v. S. Jabinus, 1 Dec.

Lucius, M., a regionary bishop, who evangelized Rhaetia (Grisons) and was martyred at Chur (Coire), in the 2d century; his sister, Emerita, was killed at Trimmis. The legend identifies him with Lucius, a British chief (king), who demanded missionaries from Pope Eleutherius (174–89) and was converted with his clan (Liber Pont. II; Ven. Bede). The tradition that a British chieftain asked for Roman missionaries and that priests were sent to him, the Ramsgate Fathers say, has a solid foundation and is the only explanation offered of the fact of the existence in Roman times of an organized British Church. This British Lucius, however, is a myth. His apocryphal Life (of the 9th century) makes him a son of Simon of Cyrene, converted by S. Timothy, and first bishop of Coire. Over his tomb, in 540, the abbey of St. Luzi was built; his relics since the 9th century are in the cathedral of Coire (precious shrine, 1252). The story that a British chief brought the Gospel to Rhaetia, was imported into Britain from Germany; the British saints connected with him lived in the 6th or 7th century. F. 3

Lucretia (Leocritia), V., M., at Cordova, Spain. Having been converted from Mohammedanism, she was ill-treated by her parents; she fled to S. Eulogius, who placed her under the protection of his sister, Annulon; but both, Eulogius and Leocritia, were arrested, imprisoned and put to trial. Eulogius was beheaded, March 11, 859; Leocritia, on March 15. In 883, the bodies of both saints were brought to Oviedo, and in 1300 to Camarasanta; v. S. Leocritia. F. 15 March.

Lucy (Lucia), M., at Bergamo; v. S. Amandus, 6 Apr.

Lucy (Luceja), V., M., with 22 companions, Mm., 25 June, Rom. Mart., occurs again in the Rom. Mart., 6 July, with Ss. Antony, Severinus, Diodorus, Dion and 17 companions. The MGR. add to her name, 6 July, Rhexos Bikarios; the Bollandists, following the martyrologies, join to her King Auceas, 136 companions mentioned by name, and 316 nameless companions; v. Chev., 2914. Lucy was a native of Campania. In 271, she was carried off in the suburbs of Rome by Aucejas (Rhexos), the chief of a Teuton marauding party. He was inflamed with passion for the young captive, but when she announced to him that she was a Christian and a virgin dedicated to Christ, his sentiments were changed to reverent devotion. For twenty years she was revered as the oracle of the tribe. When Luceja returned to Rome, Aucejas accompanied her; both, with companions, were decapitated shortly after their arrival, about 301. The acts are, perhaps, founded on fact. There is, however, much difficulty in identifying these saints and reconciling the dates in their legends. The legend on 6 July pretends that S. Lucy converted to Christianity the notorious Rictius Varus, the savage prefect who condemned to torture and death so many hundreds of the faithful. Possibly these martyrs do not belong to Rome, but to Thessalonica; Rhexos-Aucejas-Rixius Varus may have been a chieftain from the Lower Danube. The story has been applied to other groups of martyrs who had no legend, e.g., the martyrs of Troyes. (Faustus-Lucilliana).—Comm.—H. L.

Lucy, M., at Rome; v. S. Festus, 24 June.

Lucy, M., at Alexandria; v. S. Agatho, 26 June.

Lucy and Geminianus, Mm. The apocryphal acts relate that Lucy, a widow at Rome, over ninety years of age, was accused by her own son Euprepus of being a Christian, and boiled in pitch for three days(!); being conducted to prison, she passed the house of Geminianus, who had 3,200 idols which he adored; they all fell down and broke their necks; whereupon Geminianus believed, was baptized in Lucy's prison, and beheaded with her the following day, 16. Sept., 304. Their relics are in S. Lucia della Tinta, Rome, which church is dedicated to them. F. 16 Sept., Rom. Mart.; in the Latin Church simpl. (ancient); in their own church dp. 1 cl. oct.—Leg. St., 28, 61.—H. L.—Mg.

Lucy, V., a solitary at Sampigny, diocese of Verdun; she is said to have been a daughter of an Irish king and to have left her home to serve God. Having spent several years in the service of a peasant in Lorraine, she built a church, near which she led the life of a recluse. D. 19 Sept., about 1090. Her relics are at Sampigny. F. 19 Sept. in the diocese of Verdun (abolished 1560).—P. B.

Lucy, a widow; she confessed Christ under Diocletian, but survived and led the life of a solitary (where?). F. 31 Oct., Ter-Israel.

Lucy, V., M., at Syracuse in Sicily, under Diocletian, 13 Dec., 304, one of the famous Martyr-Virgins of the Church. According to her worthless acts, she was b. of a noble Greek family at Syracuse, in 283, and was educated a Christian by her mother Eutychia. After her mother had been miraculously healed at the tomb of S. Agatha, at Catania, Lucy was permitted to take the vow of virginity and distributed her dowry to the poor. Denounced as a Christian to the governor Paschasius (which is no pagan name), after some shameful tortures and indignities and several fantastic miracles, her throat was pierced by the sword. Her existence is established and her cult very ancient, but her acts are a commonplace romance, founded perhaps on a few facts. Pope Honorius (625-38) built a church in her honor at Rome; her name was received into the Canon of S. Gregory. Some of her relics were brought to Spoleto by Duke Faroald, in the 8th century, from there to Corfinium and to S. Vincent's monastery at Metz. The greater part of her body was transferred from Syracuse to Constantinople (1038), and from there to S. Giorgio, Venice (1204); her head, (1513) was brought from Venice to the cathedral of Bourges. She is patroness against sore eyes, sore throat, and epidemic diseases. F. 13 Dec., Rom. Ludgard = Lutgard.

Ludger (Liudger), first bishop of Münster, Westphalia, and missionary among the Frisians and Saxons; b. at Zuilen, near Utrecht, in Frisia; he attached himself to S. Gregory at Utrecht; under Alcuin he visited the school of York, England, and was ordained deacon (767); in 773, he returned home and was ordained priest at Cologne (777); for seven years he labored in Eastern Frisia, with Dockum as center; driven away by the Saxon invasion, he went to Rome (784); he took the habit of S. Benedict (without vows) at Monte Cassino. When, in 787, he returned to Frisia, five districts in the Northeast were given to him as missionary territory (also Heligoland); in 793, Charlemagne added Northwestern Saxony to Ludger's missionary field. In 804 he was consecrated bishop of Mimigardeford (Münster); he founded many churches and the abbey of Werden. D. 16 March, 809, at Billerbeck, Westphalia, and was buried at Werden. F. 26 March, Rom. F. 13 Oct. (principal patron) at Armento, dp. 1 cl. oct.—H. L.—P. B.

Luke (Lucas, an abbreviation from Lucanus), Evangelist. He is the inspired writer of the Third Gospel and also of the Acts of the Apostles. B. in Antioch; by profession a physician and highly educated; probably he was one of the first members of the Church of Antioch; formerly a Greek pagan, not even a Jewish proselyte, therefore not one of the 72 Disciples of Christ, nor one of the disciples who met the Lord on His way to Emmaus. He met S. Paul at Troas and became his helper on his missionary journeys; he was also at his side during the first and second Roman captivities. According to later accounts, Luke was unmarried and, after S. Paul's death, preached in Achaia and died a martyr, in 74, 84 years old, probably at Thebes in Bœotia, or at Patarae, or at Ephesus. It is from his pen that we learn the greater part of what has been revealed to us concerning the Incarnation, birth, and early life of Our Lord. His relics were brought to Constantinople in 356 and, during the Iconoclast disturbances, to the church of S. Justina in Padua. According to a legend which originated in the 6th century, S. Luke was a painter (and sculptor), principally of images of the Bl. Virgin Mary, probably on account of the charming pen-picture of the Mother of God which he draws in his Gospel. The so-called "Luke-Images" of Mary are mostly of Byzantine origin. He is patron of physicians, painters, glass-workers, butchers, and notaries. F. 18 Oct., Rom. Luke, the Stylite, C. He was born in Persia, in 879, and did military service in the imperial army; after narrowly escaping death in the unfortunate battle against the Bulgarians, in 897, he left the world and took a monk's tonsure. In 903, he was ordained priest and for 24 years was military chaplain; in 930, he retired into a cave; he wore iron plates on his body and ate only every seventh day; to compel himself to perfect silence he kept a stone in his mouth. In 933, he mounted a column near Chalcedon, where he spent a very severe winter. In 935, he left his pillar and went to Constantinople; at Eutrope, near the capital, he again mounted a column, on which he stood for 44 years. D. 11 Dec., 979, one hundred years old. His body is in the monastery of S. Bassianus. Oct. 25, 986, an earthquake destroyed his column. F. 11 Dec.—MGr.—Mz.—Copt. Cal.—Tr. rel. 13 Dec. in the Copt. Cal.—A. B., 28, 5.—Syn., 184.

Lupus, a bishop, who, in 493, accompanied S. Clotildis to the court of Clovis. He is venerated at Auxerre. F. 16 June.—P. B.

Lupus, C., Bp. of Troyes; b. at Tulle, about 383, a son of Epirichius; he married Pimeniola, a sister of S. Hilary of Arles. After seven years husband and wife separated by mutual consent and Lupus retired to the island of Lérins and placed himself under the direction of S. Honoratus. In 426, he was elected bishop of Troyes. In an assembly held at Arles, in 429, it was decided to send Ss. Germanus of Auxerre, and Lupus of Troyes to Britain to oppose the Pelagian heresy; they returned after about one year. Lupus was one of the greatest churchmen of Gaul in the 5th century. His disciples were: Severus of Treves, Polychronius of Verdun, Camelianus of Troyes, and Alpinus of Châlons. What is related in his life about his resistance to Attila and the death of Memorius, is pure fiction. His journey into Britain for the conversion of the Pelagians, is denied by hagiographers. D. 29 July, 479. F. 29 July, Rom. Mart.; dp. maj. at Troyes.—B. G., III, 364.—P. B.—Mg.

Lupus (Luppus), M., a reputed servant of S. Demetrius of Thessalonica. Assisting at the martyrdom of his master, he moistened a cloth with his blood and took his ring; with these relics he performed many miracles. He was beheaded at Thessalonica under Maximian. His story is apocryphal. Lupus belongs to Novae in Lower Moesia (near the modern Swishtow), where he had a basilica. He was in no way connected with Thessalonica or S. Demetrius. F. 23 Aug., Rom. Mart.—MGr.—H. L.—Thr. M., 258.

Lupus (Leu), C., Bp., of Sens; b. about 573, near Orléans, of Frankish parents, a son of Prince Betto and S. Austregildis of Orléans; he took the habit at Lérins; in 609, he was chosen bishop of Sens; exiled to Neustria by Chlothar II; recalled to the synod of Paris (614); d. at Brinon, 1 Sept., 623; buried in the church of S. Columba, where his body was found in 1160. F. 1 Sept., Rom. Mart.; at Sens, dp. 2 cl.; at Orléans and Bourges dp.—P. B.—Mg.

Lupus, C., Bp. of Lyons; b. at Lyons towards the end of the 5th century; he was educated at the monastery of Isle-Barbe where he took the habit; he succeeded S. Viventolus in the see of Lyons, in 523. He presided at the synod of Orléans, in 538. During his incumbency the Burgundian kingdom was destroyed after the murder of S. Sigismund, and Lyons was subjected to Frankish rule. D. 25 Sept., 542. F. 25 Sept., Rom. Mart.; dp. at Lyons.—P. B.—Mg.

Macarius, the Alexandrian, or the Younger, or the City-man (Urbanus), a younger contemporary of S. Macarius the Elder; he was archimandrite in the Nitrian desert, where he is said to have governed 5,000 monks. B. in Alexandria, he is said to have abandoned the trade of a fruit-seller to consecrate himself to God in the Thèbaid in Upper Egypt, about 335. Thence, passing into Lower Egypt, he took up his abode in the desert of Nitria, where he was ordained priest and became chief of the catechetical school. He was a friend of S. Macarius the Elder and was exiled with him, in 375, by the Arian Patriarch Lucius, to an isle in the Nile. He is said to have composed a rule for monks, which is still extant. D. about 385. F. 2 Jan., Rom. Mart.; 19 Jan., MGr.; in the Coptic Calendar, 1 May; he is minor patron of Recanati, Italy, 2 May dp. maj.—Par. 113, 117—P. B.—W.W.—Rams.

Macarius, M., at Mt. Sina; v. S. Isaias, 14 Jan.

Macarius the Elder, the Great (Glorious), or the Egyptian, abbot in the desert of Scete; b. in Upper Egypt, about 300; when a boy he was called "paidariogeron," i. e., "boy old man," because of the austerity of his life. He first attached himself to S. Antony; about 330, he fled to the desert of Scete, where he lived 60 years and became the spiritual father of innumerable holy persons who were governed by the rules he prescribed for them. In 340, he was ordained priest. When Lucius, the Arian usurper of the see of Alexandria (376), sent troops to kill or disperse the orthodox monks, Macarius, with Ss. Pambo, Macarius the Younger, Isidore, etc., was banished to a small island in the Nile. He is the founder of the old school of mysticism. D. in 391, 90 years old. After his death the citizens of Sesewir stole his body and built a church in his honor; his relics were later on transferred to the monastery in the desert of Scete under Patriarch John IV; they are now at Amalfi (Italy). Macarius, Bishop, and his chaplains Eusebius and Marius, of the mythical Ursuline martyrs. Their alleged relics were brought to the church of S. Martin, Laon, in 1166. F. 16 Oct.—H. L.

Macarius, M., at Nice; v. S. Afriges, 21 Oct.

Macarius, the "Roman," a fictitious saint of the Greek Church; he is said to have left his wife secretly and lived as a hermit, "twenty miles from the entrance to Paradise," where he was found by the monks Theophilus, Sergius, and Hyginus. The Greek Menaea give a long but apocryphal account of his life. He has been called "the Robinson of the Christian Legend." F. 23 Oct.; also 19 Jan.—MGr.—H. L.

* Macarius (Abu), Bp. of Tkovu (Tkau) in Egypt. F. 24 Oct. in the Coptic Church. He is probably identical with the following saint.

* Macarius, M., Bp. of Atku (Tekoou, Thou, Kau), near Rosette in Egypt. Being a partisan of the Monophysite patriarch, Dioscurus, he was exiled to Gangra in Paphlagonia; after his return to Alexandria he was killed by an imperial envoy, because he refused to sign the decrees of the Council of Chalcedon. F. 24 Oct.—Cal. Copt.—Syn., 89, —Eg., 94.

Macarius (B.), the Scot, abbot O. S. B.; he came to Würzburg from Scotland (Ireland?) and was elected first abbot of S. Jacob's monastery, founded by Bp. Embricho (1125-46); d. in 1153. F. 19 Dec.—H. L.

Maccabean Martyrs (Machabees), so called, because they suffered death at Antioch during the era of the Maccabee heroes, and because their sufferings and triumphs are related in the second book of Maccabees (ch. VI & VII). They were Eleazar, a chief of the scribes, ninety years old, and a mother with seven sons. The mother is called Samona (S'muni) by the Syrian tradition; the names of the seven sons are found in varying forms in the liturgical books of the Greeks, Syrians, Armenians, and Copts, but these names are spurious. Their relics were found at Antioch, about 350, and a magnificent church was built over their tomb. S. Jerome was astonished to find the relics of these martyrs at Antioch, since he had venerated them at Modein in Palestine. Probably the remains at Modein were those of the national heroes of the race of Mathathias. In the 6th century the relics were brought from Antioch to Constantinople and from there (partly) to San Pietro in Vincoli, Rome, where they were rediscovered in 1876. Some of the bones were transferred to Cologne by Archbp. Rainald. F. 1 Aug., Rom. Mart.; simpl. in the Latin Church (the only feast which the universal Latin Church keeps in honor of saints of the Old Testament); in the Greek and Syrian Churches, full office. In San Pietro in Vincoli, dp. 2 Aug.; at Cologne (church of the Maccabees), 31 May Tr. rel. The Armenians celebrate the F. of these martyrs, Eleazar and the Maccabean heroes, on Monday after the 3rd Sunday of the Transfiguration; the Chaldeans, on the first Tuesday in May; the Nestorians, on the fifth Sunday in summer; the Abyssinians, 21 Dec., the Copts, 10 Oct.—C. E.—W.W.—Buch.—Nill.

Maccaille, Bp. of Croghan, King's Co. Ireland; a disciple of S. Patrick and of S. Mel; with S. Mel he gave the veil to S. Brigid; d. about 485. F. 25 Apr.—O'H., IV, 486.

Maccaldus = S. Manghold.

Maccallin (Malcallan), abbot of S. Michael's monastery at Thierache and abbot of Waulsort (Wasor, Valciodorum) in Belgium. B. in Ireland; with S. Cathroe (Cadroe) he made a pilgrimage to S. Fursey's shrine at Péronne; after having taken the Benedictine habit at Gorze, he became a hermit at Thierache and founded a monastery there; he was also abbot of S. Forennan's monastery of Wasor, near Dinant, on the river Meuse. D. at Thierache, 21 Jan., 978. F. 21 Jan.—O'H., I, 387.

Maccarthen (Aedh McCarthy), Bp. and patron of Clogher, Tyrone; he was consecrated by S. Patrick; d. in 505. F. 15 Aug.; also 24 March, dp. in Ireland; dp. 1 cl. oct. in the diocese of Clogher. Cult approved, 17 Dec., 1903.—O'H., VIII, 208.

Maceus (Mahew), C., a disciple of S. Patrick and a hermit on the isle of Bute, Scotland. F. 11 Apr.—Barr., 58.—O'H., IV, 124.

Macedon, M., in Illyria; v. S. Philetas, 27 March.

Macedonia, M., at Smyrna; v. S. Pionius, 1 Feb.

Macedonius of Syria, hermit, C. For 40 years he wandered about Syria, Phenicia, and Cilicia, sleeping in crevices, dry ditches or cisterns; when he grew older, he sought shelter in the huts of the peasants, living on barley (hence called: Kritophagos, i.e., Barley-eater) and water. S. Flavian of Antioch ordained him priest; for his sake Emp. Theodosius I forgave the city of Antioch, where the mob had destroyed a statue of the Empress. D. 5th century. F. 24 Jan. MGr.—H. L.—P. B.

Macedonius, M., in Asia; v. S. Petronius, 12 March.

Macedonius, his wife Patricia (Matricia), their daughter Modesta, and eleven companions, Mm. It is uncertain whether Patricia and Modesta were really the wife and daughter of Macedonius. Time, place and manner of the martyrdom are doubtful. The Rom. Mart. claims these martyrs for Nicomedia. They seem to belong to the list of 22 martyrs from Nicomedia, mentioned 13 March in the Old Syr. Mart. (Achelis, 36): Macedonius (priest), Patricia (his wife), Modesta (their daughter), Cionius (priest), Saturninus, Januarius, Salvius, Petrunus, Zosimus, Eustasius (priest), Basilissa (his wife), Epipodius, Geratus, Lucas, Carpius, Galata, Domitianus (priest), Lucas, Tellus, Hyromeus, Claonius, and Patifrigia. F. 13 March, Rom. Mart.—Comm.—H. L.

Macedonius II, patriarch of Constantinople. Apparently because of Monophysitic views, he was appointed patriarch by Emp. Anastasius (496) in place of the exiled orthodox patriarch, Euphemius. He even signed the Henoticon of Emp. Zeno; in practice, however, he showed himself perfectly orthodox and insisted upon the acceptance of the Council of Chalcedon; for this he was banished, first to Chalcedon (511), later on to Euchaita in Paphlagonia; from there, he fled with the rest of the inhabitants to Gangra; d. at Gangra, 25 Apr., 516. His body was brought to Constantinople. F. 25 Apr. MGr. Mz.

Macedonius and two boys, Mm. F. 28 June, Mrt.

Macedonius, Lampyrus, Antigonus, Jovinus, Victorinus, and Tatianus, Mm., at Synnada in Phrygia. F. 19 July, Old Syr. Mart.—Achelis, 39.

Macedonius, Tatianus, and Theodulus, Mm., under Emp. Julian (362). They were slowly roasted on gridirons, at Meros in Phrygia; having broken the idols in a pagan temple which had been reopened by the governor of Phrygia to restore heathenism. F. 12 Sept. Mz. MGr.—Ruin., 598.—Thr. M., 263.

Maclovius (Maclou, Malo, Machut), Bp., C.; b. in Gwent, Wales (not at Raux in Brittany); he was educated at Llancafarn monastery; left Wales, with many others, at the outbreak of the Yellow Plague (547), crossed over to Armorica, and lived on the isle of S. Aaron, near Aleth; in 550, he was ordained priest in Wales, but returned to Brittany and settled in the cell of S. Aaron. He was appointed first bishop of Aleth (now St. Malo) by King Alain (578) and consecrated in his native Wales. Persecuted by King Hoel III and his own diocessans (615), he retired to Saintes, where S. Leontius sheltered him, but returned to Aleth after the king's death. D. on his way back to Saintes, at Archingeay, 15 Nov., 621. F. 15 Nov., Rom. Mart.; dp. in the diocese of S. Brienc; also in the Vatican Basilica. He was patron of the diocese of S. Macra (Magra), V., M.; b. near Reims; in 287, some years before the persecution of Diocletian, she was brought before Richtiovarus, the infamous imperial representative in Gaul; when she was constant in her confession, she was tortured by fire, her breasts were cut off, and she was rolled on potsherds and coals; then spreading out her hands she died during the torture. Her body was brought to Fismes (Champagne), where a church is dedicated to her honor. F. 6 Jan., Rom. Mart.; formerly at Fismes, 7 Jan. dp. 1 cl. oct.; Finding and 1st Tr. rel. 2 March dp. 2 cl.; 3 Aug. 2nd Tr. rel. (1389) dp. 2 cl. At Fère-en-Tardenois Tr. of her arm: 10 June. At Reims at present 2 March dp.; in Devon Cal. 6 Jan. and 18 June.—P. B.

Macrina the Elder, Widow. She was the paternal grandmother of Ss. Basil and Gregory of Nyssa, a devout follower of the teachings of St. Gregory the Wonder-Worker, of Neo-Caesarea in Pontus, her native city. During the persecution under Diocletian and Galerius, she, with her husband, had been forced to take refuge in the forests of the province and had remained concealed on the shores of the Black Sea for seven years or more. In 311, they were able to return to Neo-Caesarea, but at the renewal of the persecution under Licinius, they suffered so much that S. Gregory of Nyssa was able to proclaim them "true martyrs and confessors of Christ." S. Basil, her grandson, was committed to the care of S. Macrina in his boyhood. D. about the middle of the 4th century. F. 14 Jan.; also 30 May amongst all the saints of the family of St. Basil.—Rams., 173.

Macrina, Perseveranda (Pézenne, Péchinne, Pesina) and Columba, Vv., at Magné, diocese of Poitiers, 9th century. Macrina and Columba were sisters, natives of Poitou; Perseveranda came from Spain. Perseveranda is buried at Sainte-Pézenne (Deux-Sèvres), to which place she had fled to escape from the importunities of a nobleman. Macrina (d. 850) rests at Magné, Columba near Niort. F. of S. Macrina 6 July, simpl. at Poitiers.—P. B.—Mg.

Macrina the Younger, v., sister of Ss. Basil and Gregory of Nyssa. When 12 years of age, she was engaged to a young lawyer, who died suddenly, whereupon she took the vow of virginity. After having educated her sisters and brothers, she, with her mother Aemilis, took the veil and founded a monastery on the Iris River, Pontus. D. in Pontus, 19 July, about 380, and was buried in the church of the Forty Martyrs in Caesarea. F. 19 July, Rom. Magdar (Abba), a solitary in the desert of Egypt. F. 28 Aug.—Cal. Copt.

Magi, the Holy. They were the first pagans who, guided by a star (not a constellation, but a miraculous phenomenon), came from the Orient to Bethlehem to adore Christ, about one year after his birth. They were probably priests of Zoroaster, versed in astronomy. The Gospel does not mention their number; tradition says that their home was the country of the Sabæans (Persia). The names vary. The Codex Egberti has two: Pudizar and Melchias; a Paris Ms. of 7th to 8th century, three: Bithisarea, Melchior, and at Gathaspa, later on: Caspar, Melchior, and Balthassar. The royal dignity is attributed to them in view of Is. LX, 1 and Ps. LXXI, 9-11. Tradition knows nothing of their lives after their journey to Bethlehem. An old Cologne Brev. says that they were buried in the city of "Sewa." The bodies which are venerated at Cologne probably were brought from Persia to Constantinople under Emp. Zeno (474-491) and, in the 7th century, by S. Arsacius, an Oriental bishop, to the church of S. Eustorgius at Milan, called: "The Basilica of the Kings" (in the 9th century). They were given (10 June, 1164) to Archbp. Rainald von Dassel of Cologne by Barbarossa and deposited at Cologne, 23 July, 1164. They rest in a precious and artistic shrine. Particles were brought back to S. Eustorgio in 1903. Probably these relics are spurious. The Magi are patrons of travellers and pilgrims. Magnus, M., at Rome; v. S. Felicissimus, 6 Aug.

Magnus, Bp., M.; according to the Rom. Mart. (19 Aug.) he was killed under Decius. This saint seems to have been manufactured by blundering martyrologists. S. Andrew the Tribune is called by the Greeks "Megalo-martyr," the Great Martyr. In the Latin lists, on Aug. 19, was accordingly inscribed "Andreas Tribunus Magnus Martyr." This notice was read and interpreted as if it represented two saints: Andrew the Tribune and Magnus the Martyr. Later on Magnus was changed into a bishop, made to suffer some 50 years before Andrew, and a long list of torments was ascribed to him. At last his body was found at Fondi in Campania and brought to Anagni. The "acts" evidently are apocryphal. Perhaps, however, this saint is identical with the Magnus of Fabreteria, found in the Hier. Mart., 17 Aug. Fabreteria was situated near the modern town of Ceccano; the relics of this saint may at an early date have been transferred from the ruins of Fabreteria to Fondi. The Apulians claim that S. Magnus was bishop of Trani (Chev., II, 2954) and that he died 19 Aug., 254. The confusing and contradictory accounts about this saint prove either that he is a product of fancy or that several saints of the same name have been mingled together. F. 19 Aug. Rom. Magnus (Maginold, Magnoald, Mang), C., Apostle of the Allgäu (Bavaria). His history is shrouded in obscurity. He was a monk at St. Gall, but not a disciple of S. Gall. At the request of Bishop Wiktpr of Augsburg, he, with his companion S. Theodore, evangelized the territory about the upper course of the Lech; he founded a cell at Füssen, from which, 100 years later, sprang the monastery of St. Mang. D. about 750. His body was elevated in 851. In his Life, written about 851, he appears for the first time as a dragon slayer; soon after Magnus and Theodore were confounded at St. Gall with Maginold and Theodo (d. about 650), the companions of St. Gall, and the tradition of Füssen was mixed up with traits from the life of S. Columban and companions. F. 6 Sept. dp. in the dioceses of Augsburg (dp. 1 cl. at Füssen), Munich, and Rottenburg. Tr. rel. 21 March at Füssen.—H. L.—H. D.

Malachy (Maelmhaedhoc O'Morgair), Bp. C.; b. at Armagh, Ireland, in 1097; he was raised under the care of the famous recluse Imhar O'Hagan and ordained priest by S. Celsus (Celsus), in 1119, but continued his studies at Lismore under S. Malchus. In 1123, he was chosen abbot of Bangor and, in 1124, consecrated bishop of Connor. He continued to reside at Bangor and when some of the native princes sacked Bangor and Connor, he led the Bangor monks to King Cormac of Munster and founded Iveragh monastery (Kerry). In 1132, he succeeded S. Celsus in the primacy of Armagh, but owing to intrigues was unable to take possession of his see for two years; even then he had to purchase the "Jesus staff" from Niall, the usurping lay primate. S. Malachy at once set about restoring the discipline of the Church of Ireland and succeeded in raising it in great part to its former splendor; he also adopted the Roman liturgy at Armagh. In 1138, he resigned and retired to Connor, dividing the diocese into two: Down and Connor. He founded a priory of Augustinian Canons at Downpatrick. Early in 1139 he journeyed to Rome, visiting S. Bernard at Clairvaux. Innocent II appointed him Apostolic legate for Ireland, with ample powers to correct existing abuses; in 1142 he established the first Cistercian abbey at Mellifont. His greatest act was the convocation of the synod of Inis Padraig (Holmpatrick), held in 1148. S. Malachy presided as legate of the Apostolic See; 15 bishops, 200 priests, and many religious were present at the deliberations, which lasted four days. After the synod Malachy set out for a second journey to Rome, but on arriving at Clairvaux, fell sick and died in the arms of S. Bernard, 1 Nov., 1148. Numerous miracles are recorded of him. He was canonized by Clement III, 6 July, 1199. The "Prophecy of S. Malachy," giving the succession of Popes, is spurious and was unknown before 1590. The prophecy regarding the fate of Ireland was first published by Mabilon. F. 3 Nov. dp. in all Ireland; also by O. Cist. and Can. Regul.; dp. 1 cl. oct. Mamertus, archbp. of Vienne (461-75); b. of a wealthy Gallo-Roman family in the neighborhood of Lyons, a brother of the poet Claudianus Ecdicius. In 464, he was censured by Pope Hilary, because he had infringed on the rights of the metropolitan of Arles, by consecrating the bishop of S. Dié (463), disregarding the new division of the ecclesiastical provinces of Arles and Vienne. Gaul at this time was bleeding from the incursion of the barbarians, Vienne had been repeatedly shaken by earthquakes; flames had burst from the hilltops and consumed large tracts of forest and driven the wolves and bears into the city. Added to these disasters came a conflagration at Vienne, which broke out on Easter night. To supplicate God to have mercy on his people, S. Mamertus instituted or reorganized a procession with litanies, psalms, and prayers, to be held annually on the three days before the Ascension. S. Mamertus built a church in honor of S. Ferreolus, M., at Vienne. He assisted at the synod of Arles (475) and died, May 11, 477. His body was transferred to Orléans, but was burnt by the Huguenots in the 16th century. F. 11 May Rom. Marcellina, M. F. 7 June in the villa of the Duke of Hermosa at Toledo, Spain.—Arch.

Marcellina, V., the only sister of S. Ambrose. B. about 330, probably at Treves, where her father was Praefectus Praetorio Galliarum. She appears to have taken the place of her deceased parents in regard to the education of her brothers S. Ambrose and S. Satyrus. Several of the writings of S. Ambrose are dedicated to her, and we have three of the letters he addressed to her. He also publicly referred to her in the funeral sermon he preached over the body of their brother Satyrus, wherein he dwells on the family affection which bound the three together. At Christmas, 353, she vowed her virginity to Christ and took the veil from Pope Liberius, at S. Peter's, Rome. Later on she lived with her brothers at Milan. To her S. Ambrose dedicated his book "On Virginity." D. about 398, at Milan; her body is at S. Ambrogio, Milan. F. 17 July, Rom. Mart.; dp. at Rome in S. Ambrose; solemn at Milan.—H. L.—Buch.—Rams.

Marcellinus, a Roman recruit, and his brothers Argeus and Narcissus, Mm., at Tomi on the Black Sea. Under Licinius (320) Marcellinus was thrown into the sea and his brothers were beheaded. F. 2 Jan., Rom. Mart.; 19 Jan. dp. at Bucharest.—Achel.—Comm.

Marcellinus, C., third bishop of Ancona, elected in 539. S. Gregory (Dial., I, 6) relates that with a book of the Gospels he extinguished a great fire which was consuming Ancona. D. 8 Jan., 555. F. 9 Jan., Rom. Mart.; at Ancona (minor patron) 14 Jan., dp. 2 cl.—H. L.

Marcellinus, Satulus, Saturninus, Cyriacus, Regina, Procula, and four companions, Mm., in Africa. F. 2 Apr., Hier. Mart.—H. L.

Marcellinus, M., tribune and secretary of state to Emperor Honorius. He was a friend of S. Augustine of Hippo, who dedicated to him his memorable book "On the City of God." In 411, M. was sent by Emp. Honorius to preside at the great meeting of the Catholic and Donatist bishops at Carthage; he decided against the Donatists and after the conference showed great severity in enforcing the imperial decree against them. Through revengeful intrigues of the Donatists he was incarcerated and beheaded for "high treason" by order of Marinus, a general of Honorius, 13 Sept., 413. F. 6 Apr., Rom. Mart.; dp. in the provinces of Algiers and Carthage.—Rams., 177.—P. B., (18) 20 March.

Marcellinus, first bishop of Embrun; b. in Africa; he went to Rome with Ss. Vincent and Dominus, under the pontificate of S. Eusebius; sent to Gaul, they evangelized Embrun; Marcellinus was consecrated bishop by S. Eusebius of Vercelli; he suffered much from pagans and Arians. D. 13 Apr., 374; his body was transferred to Chanteuge in Auvergne, about 936. F. 20 Apr., Rom. Mart.; at Digne dp. maj.; at Aix dp.; in prov. of Algiers simpl.; in the diocese of Gap (Pmp.) 13 Apr.—P. B.—Mg.

Marcellinus, M., Pope, 30 June 286–304. He was a Roman, the son of Projectus; shortly before his death the persecution of Diocletian broke out, but he eluded the persecutors. Because he was lenient towards the renegades (lapsi), he was calumniated by some rigorists. A questionable Donatist report of 400 claims that Marcellinus surrendered the Holy Books and offered incense to Jupiter, Hercules, and Saturn; with him it accuses the Roman priests Melchiades, Marcellus and Silvester (his successor). Another account says that, after confessing his guilt, he was censured by a synod of Sinuessa and repaired the scandal he had given by suffering martyrdom, 25 Oct., 304. This story was believed since the 6th century, and, in 1542, was inserted in the Roman Breviary. The acts of the alleged synod of Sinuessa however are apocryphal; the synod was never held. Although the story of the fall and penance of Marcellinus is now universally discredited, and was removed from the Breviary in 1883, still it is probable that Marcellinus was guilty of some personal weakness in the persecution. That he died a martyr is not certain. Because the crypt of S. Callistus, the official burying place of the Roman Pontiffs, had been confiscated, Marcellinus was buried in the cemetery of S. Priscilla, which he himself had founded or enlarged. F. 26 Apr., Rom. Mart., sem. in the Latin Church; dp. at Rome; in the Greek and Russian Churches 7 June.—Lins. 201.—C. E.—W. W.—Buch.—Biogr.

Marcellinus, M., at Nicomedia; v. S. Flavius, 7 May.

Marcellinus, M., at Perugia; v. S. Florentius, 1 June.

Marcellinus, a Roman priest, and the exorcist Peter are two of the most prominent Roman martyrs of the persecution under Diocletian; they were executed in the Black Forest (Silva Nigra) near Rome, in 303, and buried in the cemetery "Ad duas lauros" on the Labican Road. In prison Peter converted his jailor Arthemius, his wife, and his daughter Paulina, who were baptized by S. Marcellinus. The acts are founded on facts; some of the incidents, however, are evident exaggerations. Over the tomb of these martyrs Constantine built a basilica in which S. Helena was buried. In 827, their relics were brought by Einhard to Seligenstadt. They have a titular church within the city of Rome. Their names are in the canon of the Roman Mass. F. 2 June, Rom. Mart.; simpl. in the Latin Church; they are princ. patrons of Seligenstadt (Tr. rel., 17 Jan.) and of Alife (some relics were brought there in 1642 and 1688), also in the city of Cremona, dp. 1 cl. oct.; in the diocese of Porto and S. Rufina dp., in S. John at the Lateran dp. 2 cl.—H. L.—P. B.—Dand., II, 166.

Marcellinus, M., in Africa; v. S. Monnas, 26 Nov.

Marcellus I, M., Pope 308–309. After the death of S. Marcellinus the apostolic see was vacant for 4 years, during the persecution of Diocletian. Marcellus, a Roman, was elected, 27 May (26 June?), 308. He divided the city into 25 titles or parishes; in the controversy about the readmission of the lapsi, he was accused of too great severity. For enforcing the penitential canons he was exiled by the tyrant Maxentius, early in 309. D. in exile, at an unknown place; his body was brought back to Rome and buried in the cemetery of S. Priscilla (Via Salaria). An unreliable report says that Marcellus was compelled to work as hostler for the public freight service. His relics are now in his own church at Rome. F. 16 Jan., Rom. Marcellus, M., Bp. of Apamea. He was governor of Cyprus under Theodosius the Great. After his wife's death he was consecrated bishop of Apamea in Syria (381). Having destroyed the great temple of Zeus, at Apamea (according to the decree of Emp. Theodosius that all idols must be overthrown throughout the Roman world), he was, about to burn the temple at Aulona, when the infuriated pagans threw him into the flames, about 390. F. 14 Aug., Rom. Mart.—MGr. Mz.

Marcellus (Marcellinus), the tribune; his wife Mammaea; their sons John and Baby-las; Peter, a soldier; Miletus, a bishop; Chiron, Ammon, and Serapion, clerics; Athenogenes, Ariston, Festus, Victor, Susanna, Zoilus, Dominus, and Memnon, laymen, Mm., the entire Christian congregation of Oxyrinchus in Egypt, were arrested and conducted to Thmuïs (not to Tomi in Scythia). By order of the prefect Culcianus they were thrown to the beasts and, at last, beheaded, in 304. Their "acts" are perfectly trustworthy. These saints were erroneously transferred to Tomi on the Black Sea by the Latin martyrologists, also by the Rom. Mart. F. 27 Aug.—Achel., 173—P. B.—H. L.

Marcellus and 8 companions, Mm., at An-cyra in Galatia. F. 4 Sept. Old Syr. Mart. The companions are: Gaianus, Elpidius, Eustachius, Eusebius, and some of the companions given to S. Gilus, 30 Aug.; v. S. Rufinus. 4 Sept.

Marcellus, M., at Tanjer. The tradition of Spain claims that he was the father of twelve holy martyrs: Ss. Claudius, Lupericius, Victoricius, Facundus, Primitivus, Faustus, Januarius, Martialis, Hemeterius, Chelidonius, Servandus, and Germanus. B. at Xeres (diocese of Seville); when with the Trajan legion in garrison at Leon, he was converted with his family by Bishop S. Decentius. Because he refused to participate in the pagan sacrifices on Emp. Maximian's birthday, he was laden with chains and conducted to Tanjer in Africa. There he was beheaded, 29 Oct., 298. His relics were brought to Leon, 30 March, 1493. His "acts" are late and cannot be trusted in what they say of his family; probably only Hemeterius and Chelidonius were his sons. F. 30 Oct., Rom. Marcianus, Nicanor, and Apollonius, Mm., in Egypt. Mart. Hier. 5 April. This is an error for June 5. "Nicanor" ought to read "Nicander."

Marcianus and Nicander, Mm., at Tomi (Constantza in Rumania). The question of Marcianus and Nicander is one of the most obscure in hagiology. They were Roman soldiers, who suffered at Tomi in Scythia and were highly venerated in the province of Moesia and the Danube country. But they are claimed also by Durostolum on the Danube, by Atina (Venafrò) in Italy, and by Egypt. F. 5 June, Old Syr. Mart., which mentions Marcianus and three companions.—Eg., 55 ss.—Thr. M., 270.

Marcianus, Nicander, Apollonius, Leonides (father of Origen), Arrhius (Orus), Gorgius (Guddonus, Turbo), Hyperechius (Phesicus), Selenias (Serenus), Irene (Bessarion) and Pammon (Pambonus), Mm., in Egypt, under Maximian. 5 June, Rom. Mart. MGr. According to their later "acts" they died of hunger and thirst in a walled pound, exposed to the glare of the sun. Choice viands and cooling drinks were laid out near them, to be had at the price of offering incense to an idol. Apollonius, Leonides, etc., are Egyptian martyrs, taken from the number of the disciples of Origen (v. Rom. Mart., 28 June). But Marcianus and Nicander are strangers from the Black Sea, added to the Egyptians by the author of the legend. The later acts seem to be a forgery by an unscrupulous hagiographer or romancer. Thr. M., 276.—Eg., 59.

Marcianus, Nicander, and Apollonius, Mm., in Egypt, of the Mart. Hier. (5 June) are the Martyrs of Tomi (Moesia); under the influence of the Old Syr. Mart. the group was reduced from ten to three.—Eg., 56.

Marcianus and Nicander, Mm., in Egypt and at Durostolum, Mart. Hier. 8 June is the date of the death of these martyrs according to their "acts." It is also the day when the feast of the martyrs of Tomi was celebrated at Durostolum (Widdin) on the Danube.—Eg., 56.—Thr. M., 258.

Marcianus and 47 companions, Mm., at Tomi, Old Syr. Mart. (10 July). The Mart. Hier. instead of the 47 supplies: Domnus, Diomedes, John, Sisinnius, Aurelianus, Aemilius, and 38 companions. Marcianus is the saint of Tomi; from which group the other names are taken cannot be determined.—Eg., 58.—Thr. M., 258.

Marcianus, Nicander, and Daria, Mm., at Atina in Campania. They were soldiers (officers?) in the imperial army; refusing to sacrifice, they left the military service, professed Christ before the Prefect Maximus, and were beheaded, probably in 302. The bodies of Ss. Nicander and Marcianus were brought to Venafrum at an unknown time; the body of S. Nicander now rests at Atina, that of S. Marcianus at Venafrò. The Church of Venafrò has added to them: S. Daria, a local saint, who is said (acts) to have been the wife of S. Nicander. They are patrons of the diocese of Venafrò. From their relics flows a miraculous liquid. F. 17 June, Rom. Mart., dp. 1 cl. oct. at Isernia and Venafrò. The Mart. Hier. (June 17) commemorates "Nicander and Hesychius of Durostolum." Perhaps, however, the Nicander of 17 June is really an Italian saint, and "Durostolum" belongs only to Hesychius. There is no doubt that the acts of the saints of Atina are an adaptation of the acts of the saints of Tomi.—Thr. M., 258.—Eg.—Passions, 380.—Achel., 88 and 150.—Ruin., 571.—H. L.

Marcianus, M., in Egypt. F. 4 Oct., Mart. Hier. This is a repetition of Marcianus of Tomi. Florus "improved" this rubric on Oct. 4 to read: "In Egypt the natal day of Marcus and Marcianus, brothers." Adon added: "and innumerable others." These "innumerable others" are the historical martyrs mentioned by Eusebius, Hist. Eccl., VIII, 8.

Margaret of Cortona, penitent. B. at Laviano in Tuscany, about 1249; for nine years she lived in concubinage with a nobleman in his castle near Montepulciano, hoping that her lover would marry her; a son was born to them. When she saw the decomposed body of her gallant, who had been murdered, she was struck with remorse and commenced a penitential life. She went to her native village with a halter round her neck, and, on Sunday, casting herself down before all the congregation, expressed her deep sorrow for the scandal she had given. She placed herself under the guidance of the Minorite Friars at Cortona. Her conversion took place in 1274, when she was 25 years old. In 1276, she was admitted to the Third Order of S. Francis; she founded a hospital and a congregation of Tertiary Sisters (Poverelle); she also intervened in public affairs. She was rewarded by God with exceptional mystical gifts. D. at Cortona, 22 Feb., 1297. Her cult was approved by Leo X and by Urban VIII (1623); she was canonized by Benedict XIII, in 1728. F. 22 Feb., Rom. Mart. dp. m. O. F. M., O. Cap. and O. Conv. Margaret, Queen of Scotland, Matron. B. about 1045, daughter of King Edward the Exiled and through her mother Agatha, kinswoman of Ghisela, the wife of S. Stephen of Hungary. After the battle of Hastings she fled with her mother and her brother, Edgar Etheling, to King Malcolm III, of Scotland (1066), who subsequently (c. 1068) married her. She was a model mother and queen: all her influence she threw into the cause of religion and piety; at her request a synod was held (regulation of Lenten fast, Easter Communion and marriage laws); she founded Dunferline abbey, to which she gave a relic of the Holy Cross. D. at Dunferline, near Edinburgh, 16 Nov., 1083 and was canonized in 1251. F. in Scotland, 16 Nov. 2 cl. (Pmp. of Glasgow). Her relics in the 16th century were brought to the Escorial in Spain or to Douai, where they perished, in 1783. F. extended to the Latin Church for 10 June, assigned to 8 July in 1678, but (1693) restored to 10 June, because on that day the prince of Wales was born. F. 10 July sem.—Barr.—P. B.—C. E.—F. J.

Margaret, V., M., at Teltsch in Moravia. F. 13 July.—H. L.

Margaret, V., M. (Margarita; called Marina in the Orient), one of the 14 Holy Helpers, highly venerated in the East and West. Her existence seems assured, but her acts are a forgery. She is said to have been a native of Antioch in Pisidia and was disowned by her pagan father for refusing to marry the Prefect Olybrius of Pisidia. After a conflict with the devil (in the form of a dragon) she was decapitated. The story is full of fabulous incidents. In the Greek Church she is highly venerated since the 4th century. In the West she appears in an Anglo-Saxon litany of the 7th century and in the Mart. of Rhabanus (13 July) of the 9th century. Her relics are in the cathedral of Montefiascone; probably most of the many relics of her, which are scattered over the entire Church, are spurious. She is patroness of pregnant women and against diabolical infestations. Her relics were stolen at Antioch (908) and brought to San Pietro della Valle on the lake of Bolsena; 14 Nov., 1185, they were transferred to the cathedral of Montefiascone. Margaret Mary Alacocque, V., religious of the Visitation Order and apostle of the devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus. B. at L'Hautecourt, France, 22 July, 1647. After her first Communion she was confined to her bed by paralysis for four years, but was instantly cured after having made the vow of virginity. Our Lord appeared to her under the form of the "Ecce Homo." 25 May, 1671, she entered the Visitation convent at Paray-le-Monial and pronounced her final vows in Nov., 1672. Now the Lord in various apparitions commissioned her to establish the devotion to His Sacred Heart, which, a decade earlier, had been theologically developed by B. John Eudes. This extraordinary mandate drew upon her the criticism of her superiors and of the community of Paray, but her obedience and humility finally prevailed, and her mission was recognized even by those who had shown her the most bitter opposition. She was also inspired by Christ to establish the Holy Hour, to pray lying prostrate from eleven till midnight on the eve of the first Friday of each month (to share in the sadness he endured when abandoned by His Apostles in His agony), and to receive Holy Communion on the first Friday of every month. D. at Paray-le-Monial, 17 Oct., 1690. Beatified 18 Sept., 1864. Canonized 13 May, 1920. Her body rests under the altar of the chapel of Paray. F. 17 Oct. dp. in France; by the Fathers of the Blessed Sacrament, by the Oblates of S. Francis (Pmp.) etc.—Seeb., 427.—Ord., II, 294.—C. E.

Margaret of Roeskilde, M., daughter of Toko, a Danish chief, was married to Herlang, a nobleman living at Ranesjö (Olshöve) in Sealand; she was hanged to a beam by her husband, 25 Oct., 1176; her body was brought to the cathedral of Roeskilde. She was venerated anciently in Denmark, but her name was not in the liturgical calendar. 25 Oct.—H. L.

Margaret of Hungary (B.), V., O. P., daughter of King Bela I, of Hungary, kinswoman to S. Elizabeth of Thuringia. B. in 1242; according to a vow made by her father she was brought to the Dominican sisters at Veszprim, at the age of three years. In 1252, she passed over to the new convent on an island in the Danube ("Margaret's Isle") near Buda-Pesth, where she took solemn vows at the age of 18 years, having refused the hand of King Ottokar II, of Bohemia. D. 18 Jan., 1271, on Margaret's Isle. The process of her beatification was begun after her death, but not finished; in 1640, it was again taken up; in 1770 for a third time; her cult was approved 28 July, 1789; her relics were destroyed the same year. F. 26 Jan. dp. O. P.; 19 Jan. in Hungary.—Seeb., 140.—Dom.—H. L.—F. J.

Margaret of Ravenna (B.), V.; b. at Rusci, dioc. of Faenza in 1442; she was blind since her third year; given to works of mortification she founded the confraternity of the "Good Jesus." D. at Ravenna, 23 Jan., 1505. H. L.—F. J.

Margaret of England (B.) V., probably related to S. Thomas of Canterbury; b. in Hungary of an English mother; her mother having died in the Holy Land, she made a pilgrimage to N. Margaret Plantagenet-Pole (B.), Countess of Salisbury, M. She was a niece to King Edward IV, was married to Sir Richard Pole, by whom she became mother of Cardinal Richard Pole, the last Catholic archbp. of Canterbury. She was governess to Henry VIII's daughter, Mary. When her son Reginald Pole sought refuge abroad, she was accused of high treason (Bill of Attainder) by Henry VIII and, after having spent two years in the Tower, was beheaded there, 28 May, 1541. Margaret of Louvain (Marguerite la Fièvre) (B.), V., M. Born at Louvain, in 1207. According to the unreliable account of Caesarius of Heisterbach she was a servant in a hospice for pilgrims. When about to take the Benedictine habit at Villers, she was captured by robbers and when she refused to marry one of them, they killed her, 2 Sept., 1227. Her body, which they had thrown into the river Dyle, was brought to Louvain, where a Gothic chapel was built over her tomb. Cult approved, 5 Dec., 1905. F. 2 Sept. at Mechlin.—H. L.

Margaret of Burgundy (B.), matron, second wife of King Charles of Naples; d. at Tonnère, in 1308. F. 5 Sept.—P. B.

Margaret of Lorraine (B.), matron, O. F. M. Born in 1463, a daughter of Duke Frederic of Lorraine; she was married to René, duke of Alençon (1488); after his death (1492) she took the habit of the 3rd Order of S. Francis and devoted herself to the education of her three children and to works of charity. On 11 Oct., 1520, she joined the Poor Clares at Argentan, a monastery founded by her. D. 2 Nov., 1521. Her body was destroyed in the church of S. Germain d'Argentan. Her process was begun under Urban VIII; cult approved, 15 March, 1921. F. 3 Nov. O. F. M.—H. L.

Margaret of Savoy (B.), matron, O. P. Born at Pinerolo, daughter of Duke Amadeo II, of Savoy; after the death of her husband (1418), the Marquis Theodore of Montferrat, influenced by S. Vincent Ferrer, she joined the Order of S. Dominic (1415); in 1426, she founded a convent at Alba, where she lived in prayer and mortification; d. at Alba, 23 Nov., 1464. Cult approved by Clement X. Marianus (deacon) and James (lector), Mm., at Lambesa in Numidia. Encouraged to constancy by the holy bishops Agapius and Secundinus, they were tortured and beheaded under Valerian, about 259. Their acts were written at the request of the two martyrs by a friend who had been an eye-witness of their passion. The report of the visions which these martyrs had in the prison of Cirta has a Donatist coloring; the martyrs themselves were Catholics. Their original feast was 6 May. On 2 Sept. there was a collective feast of several or all the martyrs of Cirta. Now the F. of Marian and James is on 30 Apr., Rom. Marina (Maryana), V.; b. in Bithynia. When her father, Eugenius, became a monk he took her to his monastery at Alexandria, where she was raised under the name of Marinus, her sex being unknown to the community. A calumny which designated her as the father of an illegitimate child, she bore in silence, taking upon her all the consequences: disgrace, ejection from the monastery and, after re-admission, humiliating penance. Her innocence and heroism became known when she died. In 1113, her body was brought to the church of S. Liberalis in Venice. The story seems to be founded on truth. Her life is the prototype for the romances of Ss. Eugenia, Euphrosyna, Maria, Margarita, Pelagia, and Theodora. Par., II, 25. F. 17 July, Rom. Mart.; dp. at Venice (Pmp.), Brindisi and in Dalmatia. Hearing that the town of Rimini (Italy) was being rebuilt, he travelled thither with a fellow artisan. S. Leo, and was astonished to find amongst the workmen many Christians of high birth, who had been sentenced to hard labor because of their refusal to sacrifice to the gods. The two holy men sought to comfort them and to alleviate their sufferings. At the end of three years Leo retired to Montefiascone, and S. Gaudentius, Bp. of Rimini, recognizing the merits of S. Marinus, ordained him deacon, so that he might be entitled to baptize the numerous converts he was making. Then he retired to Mt. Titus and there led a solitary life. 4th century. His body was

Mark the Evangelist (John Marcus), the inspired writer of one of the Gospels. It is assumed that the individual referred to in the Acts of the Apostles (XII, 12, 25; XV 37) as John Mark is identical with the Mark mentioned by S. Paul (Col. IV, 10; 2 Tim. IV, 11; Philem. 24) and by S. Peter (1 Pet. V, 13). There are many arguments both for and against this theory. The Roman Mart. mentions Mark the Evangelist, April 25; John Mark, Sept. 27. The house of his mother Mary was the meeting place of the Apostles; probably he was converted by S. Peter and did not belong to the 72 Disciples (Acts XII, 12). He was a companion of S. Paul on his first journey, but returned to Jerusalem, being displeased with the liberal reception of pagans into the Church by S. Paul (Acts XIII, 5ff.) and the difficulties of the journey. For his narrow-mindedness he was rejected by S. Paul on his second missionary journey, but accompanied S. Barnabas to Cyprus (Acts XV, 37 ss). He was reunited with S. Paul towards the end of his first Roman captivity and sent by him to Colossae (Col. IV, 10). During his captivity S. Paul sent for M. (2 Tim. IV, 11). The identification of S. Mark with the water carrier (Mark XIV, 13) or the young man who fled naked in the garden of olives (Mark XIV, 51), or of his house with the room of the Last Supper and the Descent of the Holy Ghost, are uncertain conjectures. A Roman tradition relates that S. Mark wrote his Gospel at the request of the Roman Christians and under the direction of S. Peter. There existed a tradition that St. Mark's Gospel was originally written in Latin rather than in Greek. It seems almost certain that he is the disciple whom S. Peter calls "my son Mark" (1 Pet. V, 13). According to tradition, S. Mark was the founder and first bishop of the Church of Alexandria. The Copts of Egypt call him "Apostle of Egypt, Libya, Marmarica and the Pentapolis." (Eg., 87). A later tradition (7th cent.) claims that he founded the Church of Aquileja. D. in peace at Alexandria about 68. The Latin Mart. says that he was dragged through the streets until dead; the Egyptian tradition, that he was burnt alive. His relics are said to have been brought to the abbey of Reichenau (F. Tr. rel. 9 Apr.) or to Venice (815), where they were found, 7 May, 1811. F. 25 Apr. dp. 2 cl. in the Latin Church; in the Greek and Syr. Churches, full office, also in the Coptic Church. Mark, Bp. In the Rom. Mart. on Sept. 27 the entry is: "At Byblos in Phenicia, S. Mark, the bishop, also called John by the blessed Luke." There are many arguments both for and against his identity with S. Mark the Evangelist. Those who assert it aver that his Jewish name John, was superseded by the Roman name Mark, in the same way as Saul of Tarsus became known as Paul. But Mark the Evangelist was not the companion of S. Paul, but of S. Peter. This is the universal testimony of the ancient writers and the two Marks are not confounded in the Menologies and Martyrologies of the Church. On the whole it is more probable that John Mark and Mark the Evangelist are two different persons.—Rams.—L. S., 27 Sept.

Marcus, Alexander, Alphaeus (Alphius), and Zosimus, Mm., at Calytus, near Antioch in Pisidia. Mark was a shepherd (or bishop?); to torture him, three brothers (blacksmiths), Nicon, Neon, and Heliodorus, were sent. Martialis, 5th bishop of Spoleto, 4th century; elected about 315; he assisted at a Roman synod, in 324; d. about 350. F. 4 June.—H. L.

Martialis, first bishop of Limoges and apostle of Limousin and Gascony. S. Gregory of Tours (Glor. Confess. 275) describes his basilica and the miracles performed at his tomb. The celebrated abbey of S. Martial (Limoges) was founded in 848; at that time (or at the beginning of the 11th century) his acts were adulterated and foisted upon Aurelian, an alleged converted pagan priest. The anachronisms in these apocryphal acts are gross: they are a tissue of ridiculous fables. According to them Martialis was one of the 72 Disciples of Christ and served the Lord at the Last Supper. He was sent to Gaul by S. Peter, etc. In reality he is one of the seven missionaries: Gatianus, Trophimus, Paulus, Saturninus, Dionysius, Austremonius and Martialis who came from Rome to Gaul during the persecution of Decius (251). The Congregation of Rites, 8 Apr., 1854, refused to bestow on Martialis the title "Disciple of Christ." F. 30 June, Rom. Mart. Martin of Tours, Bp., C. This illustrious saint was b. at Sabaria (Steinamanger) in Pannonia (Hungary), in 315 (317?), the son of a pagan Roman tribune, and was educated at Pavia; in his 10th year he became a catechumen; at the age of fifteen he enrolled in the imperial cavalry in Gaul (legend of the cloak given to a beggar at Amiens and the subsequent heavenly vision). He was baptized when twenty years old. Two years later, after the war of Julian against the Alamani (358), he left the army and attached himself to S. Hilary of Poitiers, who ordained him exorcist. He returned to Sabaria and converted his mother (his father remained a pagan). But his efforts against the pagan and Arian errors of his countrymen on the Danube proved ineffectual and he retired to the isle of Gallinaria; opposite Albenga (bay of Genoa). Later he returned to Poitiers and founded the monastery of Ligugé, the first in Gaul. In 371 he was elected bishop of Tours by the people and clergy. He founded Marmoutier and resided there. By nature a strong and independent character of unassuming simplicity, noble benevolence, and an incorruptible sense of justice, sound judgment and popular eloquence, as bishop he lived like a monk. He towered high above his admiring contemporaries. He destroyed the pagan temples, extirpated superstitions, and fought against the then rising Arianism. Twice he travelled to the imperial court of Treves, to Valentinian I (374) and to Maximus (383). He d. at Claudes, 9 Nov., 399, and was buried at Tours, 11 Nov. S. Sulpicius Severus wrote his panegyric in the form of a biography. S. Martin's tomb at Tours was the national shrine of France. F. 11 Nov., Rom. Martin I, M., Pope, 21 July 649–55, one of the noblest figures in the long line of Roman Pontiffs; b. at Todi in Tuscany. He was apocrietary (Apostolic delegate) at Constantinople and tried to obtain the deposition of the Monothelite patriarch Pyrrhus. By his measures against Monothelitism (Council of the Lateran, Oct., 649), he drew upon himself the anger of Emperor Constant II. The Exarch Olympius was sent to Rome with an army, but did not dare to arrest Martin. His successor, Theodore Calliopas, seized the Pope during the night of 17 to 18 June, 653. He was deported to the isle of Naxos, in the Aegean Sea, where he passed a whole year in illness and privation. Finally he was brought to Constantinople, where he was subjected to a penal trial, in which, in spite of sickness, he proved a hero. He was sentenced to be cut to pieces, but upon the intercession of the dying patriarch, Paul, the verdict was suspended and Martin was exiled to Cherson (26 March, 655), where he died after bitter privations, 16 Sept., 655. He was buried in the Blachernae church, near Cherson; part of the body was brought to Rome, buried in the cemetery of S. Mary (Marjam, the Beloved), the Blessed Virgin and Mother of God.

I. HER LIFE.—She was born at Nazareth or at Jerusalem, or at Sephoris (Dio-cæsarea), of the royal house of David and the tribe of Judah. In the Old Law she was prefigured by Eve, the "Mother of all the Living," by Mary, the Sister of Moses, by Jael, the destroyer of Sisera, by Deborah, Judith, and Esther. She was seen in the bush which burned and was not consumed, in the Paradise of Eden, the Ark of the Covenant, the Garden enclosed, the Fountain sealed up, the Fleece of Gideon, the Cloud which rose out of the sea upon the prayer of Elias. She is the Woman announced by God, who shall be victoribus through her seed (Gen. III, 5), the Virgin who shall be with child (4 Kings, XVI, 1-4). According to the apocrypha she was the long desired daughter of Joachim and Anna, who presented her at the age of three to the service of the Temple. In virginal but real wedlock she was espoused to St. Joseph, and, after having consented to become the Mother of the Messiah, she conceived the Eternal Word by the power and operation of the Holy Ghost (Luke, I, 34). At her visit to her cousin Elizabeth at Hebron, St. John the Baptist was sanctified in the womb of his mother by the presence of Christ. Overwhelmed by the thought of her exalted dignity, Mary pronounced the "Magnificat." Called to Bethlehem for the official census, she there gave birth to the Holy Child. After the Presentation in the Temple and her voluntary Purification (Luke II, 22-39), she saved the Child from His enemy (King Herod) by fleeing with him into Egypt. When the persecutor had died, she returned to Nazareth (Mt. II, 13-20), where she devoted herself to the active and contemplative life in the presence of Jesus, who was subject to her. Annually she undertook the pilgrimage to Jerusalem to celebrate Easter (Luk. II, 42-50). During the public career of Jesus she lived in retirement at Nazareth. The Evangelists rarely speak of her, but they praise her sufficiently by calling her eight times "the Mother of Jesus." They state that she was present at the marriage feast of Cana, where Jesus, at her intercession, wrought his first miracle (John II, 1 ss.); they mention the visit which, in company with his unbelieving brethren, she paid to Jesus (Mt. XII, 40); they relate that she was called blessed in public by a woman (Luke XI, 27), that she stood under the Cross with S. John, and that Jesus spoke to her from the Cross ("Woman, behold thy son") and to John ("Son, behold thy Mother"; John XIX, 25 ss.), whereupon John took her unto himself. According to the Acts (I, 14; II, 11) Mary was present at the descent of the Holy Ghost. No certain tradition tells us where she lived afterwards, or where and when she died (at Jerusalem or at Ephesus?). No picture has preserved for us her likeness. The Byzantine icons said to have been painted by St. Luke, belong to the sixth century and reproduce a conventional type. (C. E., "Virgin Mary."—Buch).

II. HER PRIVILEGES.—The Blessed Virgin Mary is really, and truly the Mother of God, the woman "clothed with the sun, with the moon under her feet and on her head a crown of 12 stars" (Ap. XII, 9). This fact is the source of all her privileges. The dignity of divine Motherhood has its correlative in a series of supernatural gifts, which, by a general term we may describe as "fulness of grace." Scheeben (Dogm., III, 277) lucidly demonstrates the unique dignity of Mary's Motherhood by pointing out that it confers upon her a rank vastly superior to that of any other creature, that it constitutes her the very centre of the hierarchy of rational creatures, and that it makes her an intermediary between God and the universe. Divine Revelation ascribes to Our Lady two distinct classes of special prerogatives, one negative, the other positive. Mary's negative prerogatives consist in the removal, or absence, of all defects and blemishes incompatible with divine Motherhood. Her positive prerogatives may be defined as certain special privileges which God conferred upon her with a view to adorn and exalt her in a manner befitting her sublime dignity as Mother of God. There are four separate and distinct negative prerogatives of the Blessed Virgin: (1) Exemption from original sin. This privilege is known as her Immaculate Conception. In the first instant of her conception, through the merits of Jesus Christ, she was preserved from all stain of original sin. (Feast, 8 December). (2) Immunity from personal sin. This privilege is commonly called her sinlessness. Throughout life she was exempt from every impulse of concupiscence and from personal sin. (3) Freedom from bodily pollution. It is this privilege we mean when we speak of her as "ever virgin." She was a pure virgin before the birth of Christ, and remained an inviolate virgin during parturition, and after the birth of her Divine Son. (4) Exemption from the dominion of death. This privilege is implied in her bodily Assumption into Heaven. Regarding the bodily resurrection and assumption of Our Lady, there is no historical tradition of sufficient authenticity to furnish the basis for a dogmatic argument. The doctrine can be established only by theological arguments. Chief amongst these is the incommunicability of her body. From this incorruptibility to Our Lady's early resurrection is but one remove. It is impossible to assume that Christ should wait for the day when all men will rise from the dead, to re-unite the virginal body of his Mother with her pure soul.—Our Lady's positive privileges, properly so called, are: (1) Her secondary mediatorship. In calling the Blessed Virgin mediatrix, we do not mean to deny that Jesus Christ is our sole Mediator. The mediation of Mary is based entirely upon that of her Divine Son and would be utterly ineffective without it. The Blessed Virgin Mary deserves to be called by the ancient traditional title of mediatrix for two reasons: (a) because she co-operated in a unique manner in the Redemption, and (b) because she is our powerful intercessor in Heaven. Since Mary is the Mother of God, her mediatorship transcends that of all the angels and saints and constitutes an altogether unique privilege. Her mediation is universal, whereas that of the angels and saints is limited in scope. The Church has approved the theological opinion of S. Alphonsus, so hotly contested by Muratori, that Our Divine Savior bestows His graces on mankind through his Blessed Mother, by approving, in 1921, an office and feast of Our Lady under the title "Mediatrice of All Graces," 31 May. A Catholic may confidently ask Mary for her intercession without ever entertaining the foolish apprehension that there is danger of offending Christ by addressing Him through His Blessed Mother. The dogmatic teaching of the Church is too clear to allow any intelligent Catholic to believe that the Blessed Virgin Mary is able to accomplish anything without her Divine Son. (2) Mary's second positive privilege is her claim to hyperdulic veneration, that is to say, the Blessed Virgin Mary is entitled to a special kind of worship, superior to that given to the other saints. The higher the dignity and holiness of a person, the greater is his or her claim to our respect and veneration. The dignity of the Blessed Virgin, morally considered, is immeasurably high and her sanctity commensurate with the fulness of grace with which God has endowed her. Consequently she is entitled to a worship which, while essentially below that due to God, exceeds the ordinary veneration shown to the saints in precisely the same measure, in which, as Mother of God, Mary outranks the angels and saints. (Pohle-Preuss, Mariology.)

III. HER LITURGICAL CULT. The veneration of Mary began in the time of the Apostles, but in the first three centuries

she did not occupy a prominent place in the thoughts and devotions of the faithful. Her glory was overshadowed by that of her Divine Son and of the holy martyrs. Prayers and praises, however, as we find them in the writings of S. Ephrem the Syrian, presuppose a long cultivated field. Soon after Constantine, but especially after the Council of Ephesus (431), devotion to Our Lady began to spread rapidly. But the Greek legend that the cities of Nice and Constantinople were officially dedicated to Mary, is apocryphal. The cult, particularly the liturgical cult, of the Blessed Virgin is now highly developed in all the Christian Churches which have retained the doctrine that we owe special veneration to the Mother of God. More than two thousand liturgical feasts in honor of the Virgin Mary are found in the ecclesiastical books of the various nations. The oldest liturgical feast is that of August the fifteenth, which originated at Antioch, or in the church of Mary, built after the Council of Ephesus (431) near Bethlehem, on the way to Jerusalem. (F. C. Conybeare, Rit. Armenorum, 526). This feast commemorated the Maternity of Mary (ib., p. 527). Since the Syrians are an agricultural people, it became customary amongst them to honor Mary by special feasts on the 15th of three months: January, May, and August; in January they invoked her blessing for the crops; on May 15th for the harvest, and on August 15th for the vintage. These three feasts are mentioned in ancient apocryphal writings and are still kept in the Syrian Church. They were also adopted by the Christians of Egypt, but owing to the irregularities of the Coptic Calendar are now celebrated in Egypt on the 21st of the corresponding months, in fact on the 21st of each month. When, towards the end of the sixth century, the Apostolic tradition of the bodily Assumption of Mary into Heaven was revived, the commemoration of her Death and Assumption, in Syria, was joined to the feast in August, in Egypt and Gaul to the feast in January. The feast of the Sleeping and Assumption of Mary on the 15th August gradually spread over the entire Roman Empire and was adopted at Rome and in the other Latin countries. An ancient custom joined a feast in honor of the Mother of God to the feast of Christmas. At Rome this feast was kept on January 1; the office and mass of New Year's Day in the Latin Church, up to this day, are of the Blessed Virgin. In the East this feast was and is to-day celebrated on the 26th of December. Other feasts which originated in the Orient, partly under the influence of the apocrypha, were the feasts of the Conception of Mary (Dec. 9), of her Nativity (Sept. 8) and her Presentation

(Nov. 21). The biblical feasts of the Meeting of Mary and Simeon (Feb. 2) and the Incarnation of Christ (March 25) are feasts of Our Lord in the East. The Latin Church, however, celebrates them in honor of the Mother of God under the titles of the Purification and the Annunciation of Mary. The Greek Church in her universal calendar later on added to these solemnities, a feast of the Deposition of the Vestment of Mary (July 2) in the Blachernae Church at Constantinople, another of the Deposition of her Girdle in the Chalkoprateion Church at Constantinople (31 Aug.), and the feast of the "Hymnus Akathistus" on the Saturday before the 5th Sunday in Lent (to thank the Blessed Virgin for the protection of Constantinople when, in the 7th and 8th centuries, the Slav forces laid siege to the city). The Roman Church in her universal calendar has added to the seven original commemorations of Mary the following nine feasts: (1) The Visitation (July 2), her visit to her cousin Elisabeth (instituted in 1389); (2) The Compassion of Our Lady beneath the Cross inst. in 1727 (Friday before Palm Sunday); (3) The feast of the Seven Sorrows of Mary (Sept. 15, inst. in 1814); (4) The feast of Our Lady of Mount Carmel (July 16, inst. in 1587); (5) The Dedication of Our Lady the Greater (S. Maria Maggiore) at Rome (Aug. 5, inst. in 1568); (6) Our Lady of the Rosary (7 Oct., inst. in 1573, in thanksgiving for the victory near Lepanto, 7 Oct., 1571); (7) The Feast of the Name of Mary (Sept. 12, inst. in 1683, in thanksgiving for the victory at Vienna, 12 Sept., 1683); (8) The feast of Our Lady of Ransom (24 Sept., inst. in 1696, at the instance of the Fathers of Our Lady of Ransom); (9) The feast of the Apparition of Our Lady of Lourdes (Feb. 11, inst. in 1907), to commemorate the apparitions of the Holy Virgin at Lourdes, in 1858. Before the reform of the Latin diocesan calendars, in 1913 and 1914, a great variety of devotional feasts were celebrated in honor of Our Lady by the various religious communities and dioceses of the Western Church. Space permits us to insert only a limited number of them. The Desponsatio of Mary to St. Joseph (23 Jan.; in Spanish countries, 26 Nov.); the Maternity of Mary (2nd Sunday in Oct.); the Purity of Mary (3rd Sunday in Oct.); the Patronage of Mary (2nd Sunday in Nov. or 4th Sunday in Oct.); the Expectation of the Birth of Jesus (18 Dec.); the Pure Heart of Mary (3rd Sunday after Pentecost or Sunday after the Octave of the Assumption); Our Lady Help of Christians (24 May); Our Lady of Grace (9 June); Translation of the Holy House of Loreto (10 Dec.); Our Lady of Suffrage (Sunday after All Saints);

Our Lady Queen of All Saints (31 May, in Spain); the Prodiges of Our Lady (in 1796) (July 9). Most of these feasts have been abolished and are retained only in a few dioceses or religious orders, where there was a special reason for continuing their celebration. Some religious Orders or Congregations keep feasts in honor of Our Lady which are proper to them. Thus the feast of the Franciscans is that of the Seven Joys of Mary (22 Aug.); the Dominican feast is that of the Holy Rosary (7 Oct.); the Jesuits celebrate Our Lady of the Street (Madonna della Strada, 24 May); the Capuchins, Our Lady, Mother of the Divine Shepherd (Divina Pastora) (2nd Sunday after Easter); the Augustinians, Our Lady of Good Counsel (26 April) and Our Lady of Consolation (Sunday after 28 Aug.); the Redemptorists, Our Lady of Perpetual Help (Sunday before 24 June); the Lazarists, Our Lady of the Miraculous Medal (27 Nov.); the Servites, Our Lady of Sorrows (15 Sept.); the Mercedarios, Our Lady of Ransom (24 Sept.); the Somaschians, Our Lady Queen of Orphans (29 April); the Camillians, Our Lady Health of the Sick (16 Nov.); the Theatines, Our Lady of Purity (16 Oct.); the Barnabites, Our Lady of Providence (3rd Sunday in Nov.); the Pallottines, Our Lady Queen of the Apostles (Friday after the Ascension); the Hieronymites, Our Lady of Grace (2nd Sunday in May); the Minims, Our Lady of the Well (21 July) and Our Lady of the Medal (20 Jan.); the Salvatorians, Our Lady, Mother of the Savior (11 Oct.); the Hospital Fathers, Patronage of Mary (first Saturday in Sept.); the Teutonic Knights, Our Lady of the Teutonic House at Jerusalem (23 Nov.); the Eudists, Heart of Mary (8 Feb.); the Fathers of the Holy Ghost, Our Lady, Refuge of Sinners (16 Jan.); the Picpus Fathers, Our Lady of Peace (9 July); the Oblate Fathers, the Immaculate Mother (17 Feb.); the Piarists, Our Lady of the Pious Schools (3rd Sunday in June); the Fathers of the Precious Blood, Our Lady of Mercy (12 May); the White Fathers, Our Lady of Africa (30 Apr.). Besides these liturgical feasts Saturday is dedicated to the Mother of God in the liturgy, and her office is said on this day whenever the rubrics permit, according to a regulation issued by Pope Urban II, in 1096. Before the latter date only the Mass of the Blessed Virgin was said on Saturday. Popular Devotion, approved by the Church, has dedicated to Mary two months: May and October. The May Devotion originated at the Roman College (P. Latomia, S. J.), towards the end of the 18th century; the indulgences were granted in 1815. The Rosary Devotion was instituted by Pope Leo XIII, in 1882. Not yet approved by the Church is the practice to dedicate August to the Pur Heart of Mary and December to her Immaculate Conception.

Several religious families have made the cult of the Blessed Virgin a special feature of their institutes: the Cistercians, where every church is dedicated to the Mother of God; the Fathers of Our Lady of Ransom, the Servites (Our Lady of Sorrows), the Carmelites, the Regular Clerics of the Mother of God (F. 1 Sept.), the Oblates of the Immaculate Mother, the Marists, the Marianites, the Assumptionists, the Eudists, and a number of other modern Congregations of priests and sisters.

IV. MARY'S CHURCHES AND SHRINES.—In our day innumerable churches are dedicated to the Mother of God. The church at Ephesus (Asia Minor), in which the Third Ecumenical Council was held (June and July, 431), was apparently the first church in Christendom dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary. Before the Council of Ephesus, which decreed to Mary the title of "Mother of God" (Theotokos), neither Jerusalem nor Rome possessed a sanctuary in her honor. Her oldest church at Rome is S. Maria Maggiore, dedicated to Mary by Pope Sixtus III, immediately after the Council of Ephesus. The small basilica which Pope Liberius (d. 366) erected on the Esquiline Hill, on the spot where Sixtus III built the stately basilica of the Mother of God, was not dedicated to Mary. The miracle of the snow, narrated in the Roman Breviary (Aug. 5) is a late medieval legend. Her first church at Jerusalem was built on the way to Bethlehem, south of the city, by the wife of a Roman officer, after 431. The Syrian legend, according to which the Apostles Ss. Peter and John built a church in honor of Mary during her lifetime at Lydda, is apocryphal. The dedication of this ancient (though post-Ephesian) sanctuary is celebrated by the Syrians on June 15, under the title "Dedication of the First Church to Mary." Since the fifth century churches have been constructed in nearly all the centres of Christendom to honor the Mother of God under her various titles, and now there is no church on earth without at least an altar or a picture of Our Lady. Numberless also are the places of pilgrimage where the Mother of God rewards the confidence of her children by favors and miracles. A simple enumeration of even the most important of them would fill a volume. This sketch will admit mention of only a few of the most celebrated shrines. Foremost are the Holy Places of Palestine, sacred both to the Redeemer and to His Mother: the church of the Annunciation at Nazareth (5th century); the grotto of the Nativity at Bethlehem, over which S. Helen erected a basilica in the 4th century; the Dormitio on Mt. Sion at Jerusalem, constructed by Justinian in the 6th century; the church over the alleged sepulchre of Mary, built under Theodosius II, and the church on Mt. Carmel, erected in the 12th century. Egypt venerates the Mother of God at Matarijeh, near Heliopolis, and at Old-Cairo (Sitti-Marjam), where the Holy Family is said to have sojourned for some time; at Atrib, north of Cairo (F. 21 June), in the monastery of Deir-el-Moharreg (F. 21 Jan.) and at Koskuam near Hermopolis (F. 6 Nov.). The ancient shrines of Constantinople, the famous church of the Blachernae with the garment of Our Lady, the church on the Metal Market with her girdle (built 596), and the church with the famous picture of the Panagia Odigitria (Guide on the Way, built after 842) have disappeared. There are, however, many churches and monasteries in Greece, Macedonia and Asia Minor where miraculous pictures of Our Lady are venerated: the Pammakaristos (All Blessed) in the schismatic cathedral at Constantinople and the picture of Our Lady "the Source of Life" (F. Friday after Easter) in its own church at Constantinople; the Myrtidiotissa on the isle of Kytheron (F. 24 Sept.); the Evangelistria on the isle of Tinos (25 March); the Prussiotissa at Deluchi in Greece (27 Aug.); Our Lady of Hope on the isle of Syros (2nd Sunday in Nov.); Our Lady of Cassiope on the isle of Corfu (8 May); the Megalospelaitissa in Morea (18 Oct.), and on Mt. Athos the "Three-Handed" Panagia at Chilandari (28 June), the Portaitissa in Iweron, and Our Lady of Consolation (Paramythia, 21 Jan.) at Vatopedi. The principal Marian sanctuaries in Italy are: the Holy House of Loreto (10 Dec.); S. Maria Maggiore at Rome (built and dedicated to Mary after 431); S. Maria in Portico (17 July), S. Maria of the Victory (8 Nov. and 8 May); S. Maria del Monte (26 April); S. Maria in Cosmedin (5 June); Our Lady of Perpetual Help (at Sant' Alfonso, 27 June); the Madonna della Strada (Genà, 24 May), and Our Lady of Peace (21 Nov.), all in Rome. In Spain we mention: Our Lady of the Pillar, Saragossa (12 Oct., 2 Jan.); Our Lady of Monserrat (27 April); Our Lady of Guadalupe in Extremadura (6 Sept.); Our Lady of Peace at Toledo (24 Jan.); Our Lady of the Girdle (Cinta) at Tortosa (1 Sept.); Our Lady of Almudena at Madrid (9 Nov.); Our Lady of the Defenceless (Desamparados, 2nd Sunday in May); Our Lady of the Kings at Granada (15 Aug.); Our Lady de las Angustias (15 Sept.) in the same city; Our Lady of Aranzazir (15 Sept.); Our Lady del Puche at Valencia (1 Sept.); Our Lady of Begoña (8 Oct.) in Navarra, and many others. Some Portuguese shrines are: Our Lady of Martyrs at Lisbon (13 May); Our Lady of the Miraculous Candle (3rd Sunday after Pentecost); Our Lady of Arrabida; Our Lady of Nazareth at Pederneira; Our Lady of the Exile (Desterro, 3rd Sunday after Epiphany); Our Lady of Pity at Santarem; Our Lady of the Valley at Lisbon; Our Lady of Light at Pedragao, and others. Of the many shrines in Germany we enumerate the following: Our Lady at Aix-la-Chapelle; Our Lady, Health of the Sick at Kevelaer (1 June); Our Lady, Patroness of Bavaria, at Munich (14 May); the Sorrowful Mother at the Duke's Hospital at Munich; Our Lady of the Chapel near Würzburg; Our Lady of Altötting in Bavaria; Our Lady of Sossau, near Straubing, in Bavaria; Our Lady of the Indulgence at Cologne; the Sorrowful Mother of Telgte in Westphalia; Our Lady of Werl in Westphalia; Our Lady of the Pine Tree at Triberg and Our Lady of Chains, Zell, both in Baden; Our Lady of Albendorf in Silesia. The most famous shrines in Austria are: Maria Zell (12 Sept.); Absam and Georgenberg in Tyrol; Maria Plain near Salzburg; Maria Taferl in Lower Austria; Maria Luschari in Carinthia, and Our Lady of Consolation at Graz, Styria, etc. In Switzerland, Our Lady of the Hermits (16 July, Maria Einsiedeln) is universally known; also Maria Stein near Basle. Very famous is Our Lady of Consolation at Luxemburg (4th Sunday after Easter). Special liturgical feasts are rare in German-speaking countries; the solemnity of the sanctuary is usually attached to some feast of Our Lady celebrated by the Universal Church. In Hungary the shrines of Radna, Sassin, and Klausenburg are best known. In Rumania, Our Lady of Neamtz; in Poland, Our Lady of Poczaiew, Our Lady of Czenstochowa (last Wednesday in August), and Our Lady of Zyrowice (7 Sept.). The Russians possess a great many shrines of the Mother of God, which are rich in liturgical feasts; Our Lady of Kasan (8 July, 22 Oct.); Our Lady of Wladimir (21 May, 23 June, and 26 Aug.); Our Lady of Kiev (3 May); Our Lady of Smolensk (28 July, 5 Sept.); Our Lady of Tichwin (26 July); Our Lady of Kostroma (14 March); Our Lady of Ephesus at Moscow (9 Oct.); Our Lady of Nowgorod (27 Nov.); Our Lady of Iweron (in the Kremlin, Moscow, 12 Feb., 31 March); Our Lady of the Don (19 Aug.); Our Lady of Jerusalem, in the cathedral of Moscow (12 Oct.); Our Lady of the Passion at Moscow (13 Aug.), and many others. In Holland: Our Lady of Roermund and the "Sweet Mother" of Hertogenbosch (7 July). In Belgium: Our Lady of Hal (1 Sept.), Our Lady of Montaigu, Our Lady of Oostaker (an imitation of Lourdes), and Our Lady of Antwerp (Sunday after 22 Aug.); also Notre Dame de la Chapelle at Brussels and Our Lady of the Reconciliation at Esquermes. The most famous shrine in Catholic England, before the Reformation, was Our Lady of Walsingham, resembling that of Loreto, and Our Lady of Glastonbury (v. C. E., "Pilgrimages"). At Aberdeen, Scotland, was a famous pilgrimage, now revived, in honor of Our Lady of Help (9 July). In the United States there are some pilgrimages of minor importance: Our Lady of Martyrs at Auriesville, N. Y.; Our Lady of Consolation at Carey, Ohio; Our Lady of the Holy Hill in Wisconsin; the Amiable Mother of Starkenburg, Missouri (Thursday after the Nativity of Mary), and Maria Stein in Ohio. Canada has a shrine of Our Lady of Grace in the Jesuit Church at Montreal (1 June). Places of pilgrimage are very numerous in Latin America: Our Lady of Guadalupe (12 Dec.) and Our Lady of Remedios (1 Sept.), near the city of Mexico, and Our Lady of Solitude in the city itself; Our Lady of Ocotlan at Tlascala, Our Lady of Solitude at Oaxaca, Our Lady of Pueblito at Queretaro (4th Sunday after Easter). Our Mother of Light at Leon (Wednesday before Pentecost), Our Lady of Refuge at Puebla (4 July), and Our Lady of Hope at Tajon (Zamora, 14 Feb.), all in the Republic of Mexico. Costa Rica glories in Our Lady of the Angels (2 Aug.) at Cartago; San Salvador in Our Lady of Peace (San Miguel); Cuba, in Our Lady of Charity (Cobre) at Santiago; Santo Domingo in Our Lady de Alta Gracia at Higüey (21 Jan); Martinique in N. Marta; Our Lady of Help at Socorro and Our Lady of the Rocks (Lajas) (16 Sept.) in the diocese of Pasto. The great sanctuary of Venezuela is Our Lady of Chiquinquirá (18 Nov., 9 July). In the Republic of Ecuador are the shrines of Our Lady of the Earthquake in the city of Quito (28 Apr.), and Our Lady of the Swan in the diocese of Loja. Peru glories in the great pilgrimage of Our Lady of Copacabana (8 Sept.); Bolivia in Our Lady of Peace at La Paz; Chili in Our Lady of Ransom at Santiago. The Republic of Argentina possesses Our Lady of Light, at Lujan (4th Sunday after Easter), Our Lady of the Valley, at Catamarca. Tucuman (2d Sunday after Easter), and Our Lady of Itali, diocese of Corrientes (9 July). The pilgrimages of Brazil are: Our Lady of Travel and the Candelaria, at Rio de Janeiro; Our Lady of the Apparition, in the diocese of Sao Paulo; Our Lady of the Rock, at Pernambuco, and Our Lady of Nazareth, at Belem de Para.

Mary of Bethany and Martha, sisters of Lazarus. Mary sat at the feet of Jesus (Luke X, 38 ss.), a type of the contemplative life, and anointed His head and feet (John XII, 3 ss.; Mt. XXVI, 7; Mk. XIV, 3). F. 19 Jan. dp. in the Brev. of Bourges (1782) and the Brev. of Meaux (1709); at Autun (1828) 7 Sept., supposing that Mary, sister of Lazarus and Mary Magdalen are not identical. The rubric "Mary and Martha" on the 19 Jan. is a copyist's error for "Ss. Marius and Martha," the Persian martyrs, whose feast is kept the same day.

Mary of Egypt, penitent; b. about 354, in Northern Egypt. According to her legendary life of the 7th century (written by S. Sophronius?) she fled from home at the age of twelve and, for 17 years, led the life of a prostitute at Alexandria. At a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, undertaken for curiosity's sake, she was struck by grace in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre; she retired to the desert east of the Jordan, where, after 17 years of penance, she was found by S. Zosimas, who brought her Holy Communion on Maundy Thursday and buried her one year later (422). F. 2 Apr., Rom. Mart. In the Greek Church 1 Apr. full office; at S. Omer (1518) 4 Aug. dp.; formerly in many dioceses 9 or 3 Apr. dp.; now at Naples (Pmp.) 3 Apr. maj.; at Jerusalem dp., also in the Constantinian Order. Her name is in the Proskomide of the Russian Mass.—In the Greek (Russian) church her full office is kept on the Latin Passion Sunday. (Nill. II). L. S.—P. B.—H. L.—MGr.—F. J.

Mary Cleophae, or Jacobi, a "sister," i. e. sister-in-law, of the Mother of God, wife of Cleophas (Clopas) or Alphaeus, mother of Ss. James the Less, Simon Jude, and Barsabas (the Just). She is one of the Three Marys who followed Our Lord from Galilee and stood at the foot of the Cross on Calvary. There are some legends purporting to give an account of her after-life; but they are not sufficiently well grounded to be of use. v.

Mary Salome, a "sister," i. e. sister-in-law, of the Blessed Virgin, present at the crucifixion and at the tomb of Christ on the morning of the Resurrection. She was the wife of Zebedee and the mother of the Apostles Ss. John and James. A late apocryphal French tradition claims that she came to the Provence with S. Mary Magdalen (v. Three Marys). The city of Veroli in Italy boasts of having received the Gospel from her; her relics were discovered there, in 1209. F. 22 Oct. Tr. rel., 25 May, Rom. Mart. The Passionists and the dioceses of Compostela, Jerusalem, and Atina keep her feast on 22 Oct. dp. Revelation of her relics at Compostela formerly 3 Dec. Mary Magdalen de' Pazzi, V.; b. at Florence, 2 Apr., 1566, of the old and noble family de' Pazzi; she joined the discalced Carmelite nuns at S. M. degl' Angeli (1583) and took the vows when sick, 27 May, 1584; she was miraculously cured after an ecstasy which lasted forty days. For five years (1585-90) she was tormented by spiritual darkness and by storms of passions and temptations, during which, exposed in body and soul to the cruelty of the evil spirits ("den of lions"), she was deprived of all sensible divine assistance. But her heroic soul, filled with a strong spirit of penance and prayer, rose to the highest perfection of virtue and unity with God; she was rewarded by extraordinary mystical gifts. Her ascetical writings show a clear mind, strong and original thought. She d. at Florence, 25 May, 1607. Beatified, 1626, canonized, 28 Apr., 1669. Her incorrupt body is in a precious crystal coffin in the Carmelite church. F. 25 May, Rom. Mary, mother of S. Mark the Evangelist, or of John Mark, daughter of Aristobulus, the brother of Barnabas. S. Peter, when delivered from prison by an angel, went to her house during the night. Mary's house was a place of assembly for the Apostles and other Christians. There is a tradition that it was the scene of the Last Supper and of the Descent of the Holy Ghost. It was, it is said, later on changed into a church. Scripture tells us nothing more about this S. Mary. She died either at Alexandria or on the isle of Cyprus. We know (Coloss. IV, 10) that Mark and Barnabas were cousins; but this Mark, the son of S. Mary, was almost certainly another than the Evangelist. 1st cent. F. 28 June, Rom. Mart.—Comm.—Rams.

Mary Magdalen, i. e., of Magdala, one of the Galilean women who supported Jesus and "out of whom He had cast seven devils" (Mk. XVI, 9.), witness of the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. Through her He sent his first message to the Apostles. She was distinguished by extraordinary spiritual love for Our Lord. According to Luke (VIII, 2) she does not appear to be identical with the nameless sinner (Lk. VII, 36ss). John (XIX, 25, XX, 1) seems to distinguish her from Mary of Bethany. Nothing definite can be drawn from the Evangelists and the older Fathers differ in their opinions. Ss. Augustine and Gregory the Great defend the identity of the three women. The same view is taken by the Latin tradition and the Western liturgy. The public thesis of the "Three Marias," maintained by Jacob Faber Stapulensis (1517-19), was considered an attack on ecclesiastical doctrine and censured by the Sorbonne, 9 Nov., 1521. The controversy remains undecided. The Oriental Churches keep the three Marias apart. The Greeks venerate Mary the sister of Lazarus 18 March (commen.); the sinner who wiped the feet of Jesus (Lk. XVIII, 38) on Wednesday of Holy Week; the Mary to whom Christ appeared after the Resurrection, on 22 July. The legend of the coming of Mary Magdalen (Martha, etc.), to Gaul (Provence), her penance at Ste-Baume, and her tomb in Vézelay, is apocryphal. More deserving of faith is the Greek tradition of her tomb at Ephesus and the Deposition of her relics at Constantinople (22 July, 886). Her reputed relics were found at S. Maximin in the Provence, 17 Dec., 840, and again in 1279 (destroyed in 1793). F. 22 July (Tr. from Ephesus to Constantinople). Rom. Mart.; in the Latin Church, dp. since end of the 9th century. In the Holy Land, Marseilles, Aix, etc., dp. 2 cl., 22 July; in the Greek and Syrian Churches full office; in the Armenian Ch. 16 July. Tr. rel. at Halle and Halberstadt (16 cent.) 6 Nov. Mary of Cercellò (de Socos, Help), V.; b. at Barcelona, in 1230. She is said to have been born in answer to the prayers of S. Peter Nolasco, whom her childless parents had approached in their disappointment. These same parents were great benefactors of the then new Order of Our Lady of Ransom, and when a branch of the Order was founded for women their already saintly daughter Mary joined the community (1264), and in time became its superior. She is praised for her prudence and austerity, but principally for her wonderful charity, because of which she is called "Maria de Socos" (Mary, the Helper). D. at Barcelona, 19 Sept., 1290. She is patroness of seamen. F. 19 Sept., Rom. Mart.; dp. 2 cl. O. Merc.; at Barcelona dp. She was the first nun who took the habit of Our Lady of Mercy.—H. L.—F. S.

Mary Frances of the Five Wounds, V., 3rd O. F. M.; b. at Naples, 25 March, 1715; her family name was Anna Maria Gallo. In her childhood she was ill-treated by her avaricious and passionate father. At the age of fifteen she refused to be married and finally obtained permission from her father to join the Third Order; she wore the habit of the Alcantarines (after 8 Sept., 1731) in her paternal home; the last 38 years of her life were spent in the house of a pious priest, Giovanni Pesiri. Calumniated and persecuted by relatives and neighbors, subject to corporal and spiritual sufferings, she was rewarded by God with the sacred stigmata, which did not visibly appear, but caused her excruciating pains on Fridays. D. at Naples, 6 Oct., 1791; beatified, 12 Nov., 1843; canonized, 29 June, 1867. Her relics are in S. Lucia del Monte. F. 6 Oct., Rom. Mart.; dp. maj. at Naples, O. F. M., O. Cap. and O. Marys, Three (Trois Maries, Tres Mariae). According to one interpretation the three Marys are: Mary the Mother of God, Mary Cleophae, and Mary Salome. The "Scholastic History" asserts that S. Ann was married three times: to S. Joachim, to S. Clopas (Cleophas), and to Salome, the brother of S. Joseph. The issue by Joachim was the first Mary, the Mother of Our Lord; by Cleophas, another daughter, the second Mary, married to Alphaeus, the mother of James the Less, Simon, Jude and Barsabas; by Salome, a third daughter, the third Mary, married to Zebedee, the mother of James the Great and John the Evangelist. This opinion is held by the Legenda Aurea, by Durandus, and Vincent of Beauvais, and is supported by the visions of S. Colette. Bernard of Périgord (1529) wrote a long treatise in support of this theory, which, however, is as fanciful as it is incongruous. Up to the 11th century it was universally held that the Blessed Virgin Mary was the only daughter of S. Ann. The other Marys were sisters-in-law, their husbands being brothers of S. Joseph. The Jews applied the terms "brother" and "sister" loosely to all blood relatives. According to the apocryphal "acts" of the Three Marys, Mary Cleophae and Mary Salome, on the death of their husbands, went to the house of Mary, the Mother of Jesus; they were with her when Jesus was crucified, and stayed with her till she died. But the French and Spanish devotion in honor of the Three Marys joins to Mary Cleophae and Mary Salome, not the Mother of God, but the great Penitent, Mary Magdalen. The tradition of Saintes Maries (Camargues) at the mouth of the Rhone maintains that these Three Marys, with S. Martha, Lazarus the friend of Christ, and others, came to Arles and died in the Provence; their relics at Saintes-Maries were found linked together, with interlaced arms, in 1423. The Spaniards claim that the Three Maries came to Spain with S. James the Great and that Mary Magdalen and Mary Cleophae died at Ciudad Rodrigo, whilst Mary Salome went to Germany, England, and Italy with S. James, and died at Veroli in Italy. The Italian tradition asserts that Mary Salome and Mary Cleophae, having heard of the martyrdom of S. John at the Latin Gate, hurried to Italy and were received at Rome by Pope Clement; they then retired to Veroli in the Hernican mountains and died there, Salome on May 25th and Cleophae on Oct. 22d. Others say that Mary Salome alone died at Veroli; her alleged body was found there in 1209. The Mass (in some places also the office) of the Three Marys was said on May 25. L. S. (Cfr. A Franz, "Die Messe," p. 199).

Mary Christine (B.), of Savoy, matron; b. at Cagliari, Sardinia, 14 Nov., 1812; daughter of Victor Emmanuel, king of Savoy, and Mary Teresa, niece of Emp. Joseph II. She was married to King Ferdinand II, of the two Sicilies, in 1832; d. at Naples, 31 Jan., 1836, at the age of 23 years, after having given birth to a son, Francis M. Leopold, duke of Calabria. After the early death of her parents Mary Ann commenced a life of penance and mortification, the reward of which were splendid mystical gifts; d. May 26, 1645, and was buried in the church of the Jesuits. She was beatified by Pius IX, in 1852. Her feast was formerly celebrated in all South America on 2 June; at the reform of 1914 it was assigned to 16 May for Peru, Bolivia, and Ecuador. (v. Bl. Marianna).—Seeb., 503.—H. L.—P. B.

Mary the Dolorous (B.), ("Elendige Marie") V., M., in Brabant. Falsely accused of theft by a lascivious man, whom she had repulsed, she was buried alive and pierced with a stake, 18 June, 1290, at Woluwe-St.-Pierre, near Bruxelles. Her body is under the high altar at Woluwe (Volvich) and her F. is kept 17 June. P. B.

Mary of the Incarnation (Madame Acarie), (B.), matron, foundress of the French Carmel. B. at Paris, 1 Feb., 1566; her father was Nicolas Aurillot. She was educated at Longchamps and married Peter of Montbrand. During the civil wars her husband was imprisoned and his property confiscated; reduced to extreme poverty, she gave herself to God and obtained the introduction of the Carmelite nuns in Paris. After her husband's death she took the habit at Amiens (1615); d. at Pontoise, 18 Apr., 1618. Cult approved by Pius VI. F. 18 Apr. O. Carm. at Versailles and Arras.—P. B.—Red. 163

Maternus, the first historical bishop of Cologne, beginning of the 4th century. The ambition of the Churches of Cologne and Treves to claim an Apostolic foundation has produced the legend that Maternus was a disciple of S. Peter. According to Canisius and others, he was the son of the widow of Naim, commissioned by the prince of the Apostles to carry the Gospel to Gaul, along with S. Eucharius and S. Valerius. On their way Maternus died at Ehl in Alsace (near Schlettstadt). Eucharius and Valerius returned to Rome and S. Peter gave them his staff to lay on the body of Maternus. They did so, and Maternus arose and continued his journey to Treves and Cologne. A similar story is told of other saints (S. Memmius of Chalons; S. Fronto of Périgueux; S. Martial of Limoges, who resuscitated his collaborators with a staff from S. Peter). That Christian missionaries may have worked in Alsace in the first century seems probable in view of the extent to which that country had been converted as early as the second century. The tradition of Cologne claims, that Maternus became the first Bp. of Cologne and died in 128 (Gel.) and that Maternus, who was Bp. of Cologne in 313, was the fifth successor of the disciple of S. Peter. It is probable that Maternus ruled the sees of Treves and Cologne for a time, and that he died at Treves, where his relics are venerated in the church of S. Paulinus. F. 13 Sept., Rom. Matthew, Apostle and Evangelist, author of the first canonical Gospel. He had been a publican (tax-gatherer) and possessed some education; by birth a Jew, he had some knowledge of Greek. From the identity of the calling of Levi (Lk., V, 25; Mk. II, 14) and of Matthew (Mt. IX, 9) results the identity of both. His father, Alphaeus, is not identical with Alphaeus, the father of James the Lesser. M. first preached in Palestine; of his activity after 42 (44) we have no historical record. Rufinus and Socrates say that he preached in Ethiopia. According to Heracleon he died a natural death; according to later apocrypha he was martyred. A legend which deserves no credence claims that his relics were brought from Ethiopia (Khartum?) to Brittany (beginning of the 5th century), from there, shortly after, by Emp. Valentinian to Paestum in Lucania (southern Italy); there they were found under the ruins of the city (954) and brought to Salerno (6 May, 1080). S. Matthew was probably stoned at Mabbug (Hierapolis) on the Euphrates (Scherm., 278). He is patron of tax-gatherers and bankers. Maura, V., M., at Antioe; v. S. Timotheus, 3 May.

Maura and Brigid (Britta), Vv., Mm., alleged daughters of King Ella of Northumberland (d. 866); with their brother, S. Espian, they made a pilgrimage to Rome and Jerusalem; while returning home, they were killed by robbers at Balagny, near Creil, diocese of Beauvais. Their relics were brought to Nogent-les-Vierges, where they were elevated, in 1185. Their story is a romance. F. 13 July, dp. maj., at Beauvais. Probably S. Espian (Spanus) has nothing to do with the two Virgins; v. Ss. Maura and Britta, 28 Jan.—P. B.—Mg.

Maura, V.; b. at Troyes, in 827; her brother, Eutropius, was bishop of Troyes; she led an austere life in her father's house, devoted to works of piety, penance, and charity. D. in 850. F. 21 Sept.; 25 Sept. sem. at Troyes.—P. B.—Mg.

Maura and her eight sons, Mm., amongst them S. Espian, were killed by Arian Goths, at the end of the 5th century in Touraine. F. 25 Oct. Their legend is a particular version of the story of Maura and Brigid (13 July). The eight brothers were: Lupus, Benignus, Beatus, Marcellianus, Mesapius, Genitor, Principinus, and Tridorius.—P. Maura, V., M., at Constantinople. F. 30 Nov., Rom. Mart. One of the Ionian islands is named after her. Her popularity in the East seems to have been very great, so much so that, powerless to eradicate the veneration in which she was held, Julian the Apostate proclaimed her cult to be none other than that of the heathen goddess Aphrodite (Venus), disguised as a Christian saint. The date and circumstances of her martyrdom are unknown.—Rams., 187.

Maurice, primicerius of the Theban Legion, M. According to the oldest account (probably composed in 450 by Eucherius of Lyons from oral tradition) an entire legion of 6,600 men, all Christians, coming from the Egyptian Thebaid, under the leadership of Maurice, Exsuperius, and Candidus (later or Victor and Ursus of Solothurn were added), refused to render service, and, by command of Maximianus Herculeus, were first decimated at Octodurum (Martigny), then cut down completely at Agaunum (St. Maurice) about 303. According to a later legendary tradition, the event took place during the campaign against the Bagaudes, 285-86, in Gaul. This account adds the name of Innocentius. Probably, after crossing the Alps, the order went out that the whole army should join in a sacrifice to be offered to the gods of Rome in thanksgiving and for the success of the imperial arms. The Christian soldiers of the Legion refused to attend and were therefore surrounded by other troops and massacred. That these martyrs were six or seven thousand in number may be exaggerated. Ado, Notker, and the Passion of S. Gereon erroneously connect with the legend of S. Maurice: Cassius and Florentius with seven companions of Bonn, Gereon and 330 companions and 350 Mauretanians of Cologne, and Victor, with 330 companions of Xanten. The tradition of Treves adds: "Thyrus and Boniface, with 330 companions." Swiss local legends join to the Legion: Verena, Secundula, Felix and Regula; a Northern Italian tradition connects with it: Alexander of Bergamo, Antoninus of Pia-cenza, Octavius, Adventor and Solutor of Turin, Maximus of Milan, Sebastianus and Alverius of Fossano, etc. The legend has a historical basis: the execution of a number of officers (Maurice, Exsuperius, and Candidus) and soldiers for refusing to sacrifice, in 285. This is shown by the very ancient cult of these martyrs in Wallis (Valais), and the erection of a basilica by S. Theodore of Octodurum at Agaunum (4th or 5th century). Perhaps the martyrdom of S. Maurice and 70 companions at Apamea in Syria, mentioned in the Greek synaxaries, contributed to the building up of the legend. The arguments against the truth of the story affect its exaggerations, but not its foundation. The objections raised in the 16th century against the tradition of the Theban Legion have been refuted by many authors, both Catholic and non-Catholic. F. 22 Sept., Rom. Maurinus, abbot, M. When the abbey church of S. Pantaleon at Cologne was being rebuilt, in 966, there was discovered a tomb with the inscription, "Here lie the bones of S. Maurinus, Abbot and Martyr, who was martyred in the porch of this church on June 10." The year was not indicated. The body in the tomb bore traces of torture and signs of a violent death. Miracles were wrought in favor of those who had recourse to the prayers of the personage whose bones they were, and they were accepted by the ecclesiastical authorities as sufficient proof of the substantial accuracy of the inscription. Thus S. Maurinus—whatever he was—obtained a popular cult at Cologne and a place in the later Martyrologies. F. 10 June, Rom. Mart., sem. at Cologne; at S. Maurus, Abbot. O. S. B., deacon; b. at Rome, about 504, son of the Senator Eutychius (Equitius); in 513, he became an oblate at Subiaco; as such, upon the command of S. Benedict, he walked upon the water and drew S. Placidus out of the lake. In 513 he accompanied S. Benedict to Monte Cassino. Of the remainder of his life nothing is known. An unreliable 9th century tradition claims that S. Maur was invited to come to LeMans by Bp. Innocent; dismissed by his designated successor, Domnolus, S. Maur founded Glanfeuil monastery in the diocese of Angers. In 582, he retired into a cell, next to the church (later on shrine) of S. Maur, where he died, about 584. His relics were brought from S. Maur to S. Germain, Paris (1750), where they were destroyed, in 1793. He is patron of the Azores islands, and is invoked against gout and hoarseness. F. 15 Feb., Rom. Maximianus (Maximus), C., archbp. of Ravenna; b. at Pola in Istria; he was consecrated archbp. of Ravenna at Patras by Pope Vigilius (546). He restored the churches of S. Probus, S. John the Baptist, S. Stephen (550), and consecrated the celebrated basilica of S. Apollinaris at Classe (549) and the church of S. Vitalis (547, in the presence of Emperor Justinian and Theodora). At Pola, he erected a church in honor of the B. V. Mary, and donated many works of art to the cathedral. D. 21 Feb., 553. F. 21 Feb., Rom. Mart., dp. at Ravenna and Trieste-Pola.—H. L.—Rams.

Maximianus (Maximinianus), patriarch of Constantinople, 431–34. B. at Rome, he came to Constantinople as a youth and was ordained priest by Sisinnius. His administration was disturbed by the Nestorian heresy. F. 21 Apr. Mz.

Maximianus, M., in Africa; v. S. Secundianus, 14 May.

Maximianus, Bp., C. He was a Sicilian by birth and a member of the monastic community which Gregory the Great established in his family mansion on the Coelian Hill at Rome. He served both St. Gregory and his predecessor, Pelagius, as their representative at the court of Constantinople; at Rome he acted for a time as minister to Pope Gregory. The latter appointed him bishop of Syracuse and Apostolic legate for Sicily (591). He d. at Syracuse, in 594. F. 9 June, Rom. Mart.; dp. at Syracuse.—H. L.—Rams.

Maximianus, M. 21 Aug.; v. S. Bonosus.

Maximianus, Bp. of Bagaia (Bagae) in Numidia. He was a converted Donatist. Finding his nomination displeasing to the people, he persuaded the Fathers of the Council of Milevis to accept his resignation. When, however, he took the basilica of Calvianum away from the Donatists, he was severely wounded and thrown from a tower by the revolting heretics; nursed back to life, he obtained a decree of justification from Emp. Honorius. D. in peace; 5th century. F. 3 Oct., Rom. Mart.; simpl. in prov. of Algiers.—H. L.—Rams.

Maximilian (Mamilianus), M., of Thebeste in Numidia. Forced to do military service when 22 years old, and thinking that a Christian was not permitted to be a soldier, because soldiering was for many a proximate occasion of sin, he refused to put on the uniform and to take the oath. Because he gave his faith as the reason of his refusal, he was beheaded, 12 March, 295, and buried by Pompejana near S. Cyprian, at Carthage. The Rom. Mart. falsely claims that he died at Rome. F. 12 March, Rom. Mart.—Passions, 104.—Ruin., 340.

Maximilian of Antioch, soldier. M.; with S. Bonosus he carried the Labarum under Julian the Apostate and was beheaded towards the end of 362 or the beginning of 363, because he refused to take the monogram of Christ from the standard. F. 21 Aug., Rom. Mart. (the date is unhistorical).—H. L.

Maximilian, Bp. of Lorch, M., Apostle of Noricum, the territory between the Inn and the Danube. According to the untrustworthy "acts" of the 13th century he was sent by Sixtus II (257–58) to evangelize Noricum. The centre of his activity was Lorch on the Danube. He was martyred at Cilli in Styria, under Numerian (283–84). His missionary activity, the founding by him of the church of Laureacum (Lorch) and his martyrdom, are probably historical. His relics were brought from Pongau to Bischofshofen by S. Rupert, in 876; to Alttöetting by Karlmann; in 985 to Passau. F. 12 Oct., Rom. Mart.; dp. in Austria and Bavaria; dp. 1 cl. oct. Maximinus, C., Bp. of Besançon; he was consecrated by Pope Cajus; when advanced in years, he retired to the solitude of Fouchéran, where he died, about 290. F. 29 May.—P. B.

Maximinus, C., Bp. of Treves, then the residence of Emp. Constans. B. at Sully near Poitiers; he was a brother of S. Maxentius, Bp. of Poitiers; in 332, he succeeded S. Agritius; he harbored the exiled S. Athanasius, Maximin, Hosius, and Pope Julius induced Emp. Constantius to convoke the synod of Sardica (342); the Arian synod of Philipopolis (343) nominally excommunicated him. In 352, he went to Constantinople with S. Servatius of Tongres to mediate between Emp. Constantius and the usurper Magnentius, but he was unsuccessful. On his journey home he went to Alexandria and Rome and died in his native town, 29 May, 353. His relics were brought to Treves in the autumn of 353 and deposited in the present church of S. Maximin. F. 29 May, Rom. Mart.; at Treves (minor patr.) dp. maj.; his Tr. 29 March (formerly 12 Sept.)—H. L.—P. B.—Rams.

Maximinus, Bp., C., alleged companion of Ss. Lazarus, Martha, and Magdalen in their journey to Gaul and first Bp. of Aix. His connection with Lazarus, etc., stands and falls with the legend of their coming to the Provence. Tradition claims that he was the man born blind, to whom Christ restored sight (John IX). Duchesne proves that this saint, the object of a very ancient local cult, was not considered the first bishop of Aix, or connected with the life of Mary Magdalen, except in very recent legends, devised by the monks of Vézelay (11th century). The era in which he lived cannot be determined (5th century?). The last elevation of his relics took place in the town of S. Maximin, 13 May 1820, when they were brought to the Cathedral of Aix. Maximinus (B.), alleged Bp. and M. who is said to have appeared to a viner (1320), whereupon his relics were found in the church of S. Ursula, Cologne. He belongs to the mythical cycle of S. Ursula. r. 29 Oct. (Gel.)

Maximus (Même), abbot of Limours, M. B. at Margarite, near Cahors, and educated by S. Desiderius; to escape marriage he fled to Limoges, from there to Vienne, then took the habit at St-Jean-de-Limours. The intendant of King Chlotaire, Eldehode, mortally wounded him because he had assumed the administration of the monastery without the intendant's permission. His legend is unreliable. D. about 625. Maximus of Valentia, Bp. of Pavia, C., successor of S. Epiphanius, 496-511. He had been a lawyer; in 504, he assisted at a synod at Rome. D. 8 Jan. His relics were probably brought to Halle. F. at Pavia 19 Jan. dp.; at Halle (Brev. of 1534), solemn, 8 Jan.; at Alessandria, 19 Jan. Pmp.—H. L.

* Maximus, the Greek, C.; b. at Arta in Albania; he studied under John Laskaris at Paris, Florence, and Venice; then took the habit of S. Basil at Vatopedi (Mt. Athos); in 1518, he was sent to Moscow to correct the liturgical books of the Russian Church. He resided at Tshudow monastery. His reforms caused great disturbances: the Patriarch Barlaam was deposed, Maximus himself imprisoned in Simonow monastery, and later on in Otrosh monastery at Twer. After 12 years he was brought to the Troize-Sergiew Laura, where he died, in 1556. In spite of his travels in the West he was a bitter schismatic. F. 21 Jan., in the Russian Church. Mz. Mrt.

Maximus, C., Bp. of Jerusalem; under Maximin, while still a priest, he was robbed of one eye and paralyzed in one foot for his constancy. He accompanied Bp. Macarius of Jerusalem to the Council of Nice and succeeded him, in 333; although in his simplicity he had subscribed at Tyre and at Sardica against Athanasius, he was practically orthodox; he was the first of the bishops of Palestine to sign the acts of the Council of Sardica; and when S. Athanasius returned from exile, St. Maximus summoned all his bishops to welcome and honor the holy Doctor. Therefore he was deposed by the Semi-Arians (Eusebians) shortly before his death (351): all his life he had been a model of charity and sanctity. The Greeks do not venerate him. F. 5 May, Rom. Maximus, the first known bishop of Turin, a theological writer, who governed his flock wisely and successfully in the troublous time of the barbarian inroads into Italy. B. in Rhaetia (Vercelli?), about 380; in 451, he took part in the synod of Milan, where the bishops received the Dogmatic Letter of Leo I against Nestorianism and Monophysitism; in 465, he assisted at a Roman synod. His sermons, which give an interesting picture of dying paganism and the disturbances resulting from the migration of nations, show that he was a zealous pastor, who combated heathenism, heresy, and superstition, and strenuously defended the orthodox faith. Maximus, the Confessor, or Theologian, one of the chief Doctors of the mystery of the Incarnation and of ascetic mysticism. B. about 580 at Constantinople of noble parents; he was secretary to Emp. Heraclius; when Monothelitism spread at court, he resigned and took the monastic habit at Chrysopolis (now Scutari on the Bosphorus), in 630; there he was elected abbot. He was the principal champion of orthodoxy against Monothelitism and against Pyrihus, the heretical patriarch of Constantinople. He induced Pope Martin I to assemble the Lateran synod, in 649. In 653, he was arrested at Rome for rejecting the "Typos" of Constant II, and dragged to Constantinople; in 655, he was exiled to Bizya in Thrace; in 662, sentenced a second time at Constantinople and banished to Lagia, after which he and his two disciples (both named Anastasius) had their tongues and the right hands lopped off. D. of his wounds at Shemaram on the Black Sea (Colchis), 13 Aug., 622. Maximus was the most prominent theologian of the 7th century; he exercised great influence on the development of theology, both in the East and the West. F. 13 Aug., Rom. Maximus, M., at Avia, near Aquila. He was a deacon (levite), zealous in preaching and bringing souls to Christ. When the persecution under Decius broke out, in 250, he was one of the first to be arrested. There is a long account of the savage tortures to which he was subjected and the flattering offers made to him if he would renounce Christ. The imperial officers were the more intent on making him yield to temptation, because he was one of the most conspicuous and influential personages in the locality. But all attempts were vain, and, in fine, the sentence came. He was tortured, thrown from a precipice, and stoned to death. He is probably identical with a Maximus who is said to have suffered in Asia (F. 30 Apr. dp. at Cattaro and at Smyrna). F. 20 Oct., Rom. Mart.; at Aquila, Tr. rel. 10 June dp. 1 cl. oct. Maximus, Bp. of Reji (Riez) in Provence. B. at Château-Redon, near Digne, about 400; he took the habit at Lérins and, in 426, succeeded the abbot, S. Honoratus; after several attempts to make him accept charge of a diocese, he was elected Bp. of Riez (433) and as such took part in the synods of Reji (439), Orange (441), and Arles (454); he possessed the gift of miracles. He is also said to have preached the Gospel in Théroutanne in the north of France for eight years. D. 27 Nov., 460. His relics were transferred from Wisme to Théroutanne, and thence to Ypres. His head is in the cathedral of Arras. Formerly he was titular of the cathedral of Digne. F. 27 Nov., Rom. Mart. dp. at Digne; dp. 2 cl. at Arras; at Reggio d'Emilia (by error) dp. 2 cl. minor patron. (Reji is not Reggio, but Riez). He is also patron of Boulogne-sur-Mer and of the ancient church of Théroutanne. His feast, 27 Nov. at Boulogne, is dp. 1 cl.; on Sept. 13 F. of the Finding of his relics; on Oct. 2, F. of the Showing of his relics. Probably, however, the relics venerated at Boulogne, Ypres, and Abbéville belong to some other saint. (See S. Maximus of Wisme, 28 Nov.)—P. B.—H. L.—Mg.

Maximus, 14th Bp. of Avignon. Having calumniated S. Rusticola of Arles, he performed works of austere penance. 7th century. His relics are in the cathedral of Avignon. F. 27 Nov.—P. B.

Maximus of Wisme, Bp., C. On Dec. 13, 953, at Wisme (Pas-de-Calais) were found the relics of a S. Maximus; they were elevated by Milo, Bp. of Théroutanne, in 1065. P. B. 28 Nov. This saint has been identified by the Morinenses with S. Maximus of Riez and was elected patron of Boulogne-sur-Mer and of Théroutanne. Probably he was a local saint whose memory had been forgotten by the Morinenses of Pas-de-Calais.

Maximus, M.; sent to arrest Ss. Adrias and Paulina, he was converted by them, and then, by order of Emp. Valerianus, thrown from a bridge into the Tiber; S. Eusebius buried him in the cemetery of S. Callistus, 20 Jan., 255. F. 2 Dec. Rom. Mart.—H. L.

Medard, Bp. of Noyon and Tournay, C.; b. about 500, of a noble family, at Salency, Picardy; in 530 he became bishop of Veromandum; in 531, for greater safety from the incursions of the Norsemen, he removed his residence to the fortified town of Noyon. About 532, he succeeded S. Eleutherius as Bp. of Tournay; the union between Noyon and Tournay lasted till 1146. He zealously worked to convert the pagans of his diocese. On his deathbed he was visited by King Chlotar, who sought his blessing and forgiveness for the injuries he had done him. D. 8 June, 560 (545?), about 34 years after S. Gildard. The Rom. Mart. erroneously claims that Gildard and Medard were brothers, who were born, consecrated bishops, and died on the same day. Medard was a very popular saint, especially in Northern France, and is the hero of numerous legends. His body was brought to Soissons, where a celebrated abbey was built in his honor; later on his relics were transferred to Dijon (Tr. rel., 9 Sept.). F. 8 June, Rom. residing at Ixcola (Yxküll) on the Düna. D. 14 Aug., 1196. His see was transferred to Riga, in 1201. Formerly he was venerated at Riga, 14 Aug.—H. L.

Meinrad (Meginrad), M.; b. towards the end of the 8th century, in the Stülchgau near Rottenburg; said to have been related to the Hohenzollern family. He took the Benedictine habit at Reichenau; after his ordination he was appointed rector of a school on the Upper Lake of Zurich. In middle life (835) he felt called to solitude, and, at length, found a resting place in a dense forest, where he built a cell and a chapel, placing therein a statue of the Blessed Virgin Mary presented to him by a Benedictine abbess. This statue came to be called "Our Lady of the Hermits," and the chapel itself Einsiedeln (Hermitage). St. Meinrad, after having passed several years there as a recluse, was murdered by some ruffians, who thought he had hidden treasures in his hermitage (861). On the spot arose the celebrated abbey of Einsiedeln, still flourishing in our day. Two ravens, which betrayed the murderers, are the emblem of S. Meinrad and of Einsiedeln. His body is buried in the abbey church. F. 21 Jan., Rom. Mart.; at Einsiedeln and at S. Melania the Elder, matron. B. at Rome, about 343; widowed about 365, she was the first one of the noble Roman matrons to leave Rome for the Holy Land; in 371 she was in Egypt; in 378 she founded a convent for 50 nuns at Jerusalem and led a life of austere asceticism. She was a disciple of S. Paulinus of Nola and of S. Augustine. In 402, she returned for a short time to Rome; d. at Jerusalem, 8 June, 400. F. 8 Oct. Mrt.—Par., 156.—H. L.

Melania the Younger, matron. B. at Rome of the noble house of the Valerii, about 393; her maternal grandmother was S. Melania the Elder. When 13 years old, she was married to Pinianus, her half-cousin; after the early death of their two children, the pair lived in continency and gradually (after 404) gave their immense wealth to the poor, to the Church and monastic establishments. Because of the Visigoth invasion they left Rome (408) and lived two years at Messina, 410–17, with Ss. Augustine and Alypius at Tagaste; in 417, they travelled to Rome and Jerusalem. Pinian took a monk's habit in a monastery on Mt. Olive; Melania became abbess in a nearby convent, where the highly educated and courageous lady devoted herself to a life of severe asceticism and to the study of S. Scripture; she also copied books; with great zeal she insisted on purity of faith and on monastic discipline. D. at Jerusalem, 31 Dec., 439. Cardinal Rampolla restored her memory. F. 31 Dec., Rom. * Meletius, the Ballisiot; d. in 1203. F. 19 Jan. Mz.

Meletius, Bp. of Antioch, C.; b. at Melitene in Armenia; in 358, he appears as successor of Eustathius of Sebaste; in 359, he was present at the synod of Seleucia; in 360, he was elected patriarch of Antioch. This was done in the hope that his sincerity and kindly disposition might effect the reconciliation of the parties contending there. He found his diocese divided (since the banishment of the lawful bishop S. Eustathius) into a Nicene minority and a semi-Arian majority with a bishop of their own (Euzoius). As soon as Meletius manifested his orthodoxy, he was deposed by Constantius, one month after his accession. Lucifer of Cagliari now rashly consecrated a Latin priest, Paulinus, to succeed Meletius, a measure which deeply wounded the feelings of many orthodox Eustathians. When Meletius returned, under Julian the Apostate, in 362, there were three Catholic bishops at Antioch, opposing one another (Meletian Schism). There were also dogmatic differences between the Meletians and the Eustathians. Repeatedly banished by Emp. Valens (365 and 371) Meletius slowly gained the entire Orient, whilst Pope Damasus and the Church of Alexandria sided with Paulinus. Still Meletius was appointed to preside at the 2nd Ecumenical Council of Constantinople. He died during the sessions of this Council, 12 Feb., 381. The schism lasted until 413. His body was brought to Antioch and buried at the side of S. Babylas, the Patron of the city. F. 12 Feb., Rom. Mellinus, M., in Spain; v. S. Maximus, 20 Nov.

Mellitus, third Archbp. of Canterbury, C., O. S. B. He had been abbot of S. Andrew's at Rome and was the leader of the second company of missionaries whom S. Gregory sent to England, in 601, to aid S. Augustine in the work he had begun some years before in Kent and to further spread the Gospel amongst the Anglo-Saxons. He was elected Bp. of the East-Saxons at London (church of S. Paul); driven from England by the pagan sons of S. Sigebert (616), he went to Gaul and never regained possession of his diocese. When S. Lawrence died (619), Mellitus was chosen metropolitan of Canterbury. By his prayers he quelled the great fire which threatened to consume all Canterbury. D. in 624 and was buried in S. Augustine's, Canterbury. F. 24 Apr., Rom. Mart.; dp. over all England.—St.—Comm.

Mellonius (Mellon, Melanious), C., Bp. of Rouen. He is said to have been a native of Cardiff, Wales; b. about 237, converted at Rome by Pope S. Stephen; the same Pope (?) is said to have sent him to Gaul, to preach the Gospel on the Lower Seine; he established his see in the city of Rouen. D. about 311. His relics were brought from the crypt of S. Gervais to Pontoise. F. 22 Oct., Rom. Mart., dp. maj. at Rouen.—B. G., III, 466.—P. B.

Melor, M., son of S. Meliau (king of Armorican Cornwall, Cournailles). After his brother Rivold had stabbed their father, S. Meliau, he had Melor's right hand and left foot cut off; later on he had him beheaded by Cerialtan at Beuzit, at the age of seven (about 544). His relics were at Lanmeur. F. 1 Oct.; now dp. 3 Oct. at Quimper; he was highly venerated at Amesbury, Wiltshire.—B. G., II, 467.

Memmia, M., at Rome; v. S. Cyriacus, 8 Aug.

Memmius (Meinge), Bp., C., apostle of Châlons-sur-Marne. A French medieval tradition pretends that the evangelization took place in the first century, but Duchesne assigns the founding of the see of Châlons to the 4th century. Memmius, b. at Rome, came to Châlons with the deacon Donatianus and the subdeacon Domitianus. Their relics are at Buxerre (now St-Menge). F. 5 Aug. Rom. Mart.; at Châlons, dp. 1 cl. Menas, M., at Ostia; v. S. Cusirinus, 23 Aug.

Menas, patriarch of Constantinople, a native of Alexandria and superior of the Samson monastery at Constantinople; 13 March, 536, he was elected patriarch of Constantinople, and consecrated by Pope S. Agapetus, 22 Apr., 536, to replace the Monophysite Anthimus. At a synod held in 544, he condemned Origenism. In the controversy of the Three Chapters, however, he signed the decrees of Emp. Justinian of 544 and 551. When Pope Vigilius recalled the consent which at an earlier date he had given to the first decree, he excommunicated Menas and other bishops. Menas submitted, but died soon after, 24 Aug., 552. F. 24 Aug., MGR.; 25 Aug., Rom. Mart. dp. at Constantinople L. S.—P. B.—Syn., 119.—Biogr.

He consecrated four patriarchs: Alexander, Cosmas, Theodore, and Chail; 8th century. F. 3 Nov., Cal. Copt.—Syn., 102.

Menas, M. in Egypt; v. C. Archelaus, 7 Nov.

Menas (Mennas), M., a native of Egypt; according to the late "acts" he was a Christian, stationed at Kotyaeum in Phrygia; he left the army when the persecution of Diocletian broke out. Strengthened by several years of austere asceticism, he felt himself moved to share the lot of his fellow-believers and returned to Kotyaeum; he publicly professed his faith in the circus, was arrested by the Prefect Pyrrhus, whipped, tortured, and beheaded, about 295 (303?). His body was brought back to Egypt and his tomb and basilica in the desert of Mareotis soon became the national sanctuary of Egypt, the glory of the Libyan desert. His cult was spread over the whole Church by travelling merchants and pilgrims. The simple story of his life was overgrown by numberless myths and legends and the one saint venerated in so many places, appears as S. Menas of Alexandria, of Constantinople, of Salona, of Armenia, nearly always as a soldier. At an early date a church was dedicated to him at Kotyaeum in Phrygia, which became a renowned shrine, and produced the legend that he had died there. His "acts" were written at Kotyaeum. It seems, however, to be an established fact that S. Menas lived and died in Egypt, not at Kotyaeum. His relics were never brought to Constantinople. His ancient veneration was confirmed by the finding of the ruins of his basilica, tomb, well, thermae, and monastery at Karm-Abu-Mina, in the Egyptian desert, 1905-08. F. 11 Nov., Rom. Mart.; simpl. in the Lat. Church, dp. at Smyrna; in the Coptic, Syrian, and Greek Churches, full office. His name is mentioned daily in the Coptic Mass.—Syn., 117.—P. B.—Luc.

Menas (Mennas), hermit, C., in the Abruzzi, probably at Santomena, diocese of Conza. He was a Greek from Asia Minor. S. Gregory speaks of his zeal for the conversion of sinners, his familiarity with God's creatures, and his wonderful insight into the hearts of those who had dealings with him. (Dialog., III, 26). Menodora, Metrodora, and Nymphodora, Vv., Mm.; sisters who suffered under Galerius, near the Pythian baths or hot springs of Bithynia. At the time of the great persecution under Diocletian, they retired to the interior of the country, but were discovered and brought before the local judge. To shake the constancy of the two younger girls, the magistrate had the elder tortured first and forced the others to gaze on the ghastly wounds which disfigured her body. He repeated this piece of savagery in the case of the second sister, thinking to frighten little Nymphodora. But all three were firm to the end in their profession of Christ. It is said that the child Nymphodora did not survive the scourging which was to have been a preliminary to her execution. Their story is unreliable, but based on genuine earlier acts. F. 10 Sept., Rom. Mart. (Baronius); full office in the Greek Church.—H. L.—Rams.

Mercurius of Caesarea in Cappadocia, one of the great military martyrs of the Eastern Church. He was a soldier, son of a Scythian officer; he was called "Abadir" by his father, "Mercurius" when he became a soldier. By his bravery he gained the high rank of primicerius in the army. Because he refused to sacrifice to the gods, he was executed under Decius, in 250, at Caesarea in Cappadocia. An Oriental tradition relates that, 113 years after his death, he came down from Heaven, and, with his lance or with an arrow, killed Julian the Apostate. His existence and cult are firmly established, but his story is a mere romance. F. 25 Nov., Rom. Mart.; full office in the Greek Church; in the Russian Church 24 Nov.; in the Coptic Ch. Mesrop (Mashtotz), the "Interpreter," spiritual guide of the Armenian nation and one of the most extraordinary men of the ancient Christian Orient. B. in the province of Taron, Armenia; he was a disciple of S. Nerses the Great, and secretary to Vramshapuh, the Persian governor of Armenia. After having entered a monastery, where he practiced great austerities, he preached the Gospel in Golthan (Eastern Armenia). He invented the Armenian alphabet (36 letters, adapted from the Greek) and together with S. Sahak and his disciples translated parts of the Bible and many other writings; he founded many schools and monasteries, thereby saving the nation from being absorbed by Persia. After the death of S. Sahak, he was Katholikos, but only for six months. D. at Oshakan (Valarsabad), 19 Feb., 441. F. 19 Feb. and 25 Nov. in the Armenian Menology. His name is in the diptychs of the Armenian Mass.—Nill., II, 584, 597.—Web., 393.

Methodius I, Bp., C.; ecclesiastical writer and patriarch of Constantinople, called "the Confessor." B. at Syracuse; he was an officer at the court of Constantinople, but left the world and took the Basilian habit. At the second outbreak of Iconoclasm (814), he stood by his Order and defended the cult of images. After the removal of the Patriarch, S. Nicephorus, he went to Rome and, in 821, returned to win Emp. Michael ("the Stammerer") over to orthodoxy. But he was ill-treated and banished for seven years to a mausoleum on Antigoni island in the Propontis. After the death of Michael, he returned to Constantinople and, after the demise of Theophilus (842), was designated patriarch in place of the Iconoclast John. He convoked a synod, which renewed the decrees of the second Council of Nice and instituted the Feast of Orthodoxy, on the first Sunday in Lent. 13 March, 842, he brought the relics of S. Nicephorus to Constantinople. D. 14 June, 846. F. 14 June, Rom. Mart. at Constantinople dp.; full office in the Greek and Syrian Churches; at Syracuse, dp.—Biogr.—C. E.—W.W.

Methodius, Bp., C., Apostle of the Slavs, brother of S. Cyril. B. at Thessalonica; he was procurator over some Slav parts of the Greek Empire (?), then a lay brother in Polychron monastery, on Mt. Olympus, Bithynia. Concerning his missionary labors in Moravia, v. S. Cyril (7 July). After the death of his brother at Rome (869), Methodius, having been consecrated bishop of Pannonia and Moravia, returned, but on account of the war between the German and Moravian princes, left Moravia and went to the Pannonian prince Kozel, to evangelize his people. But the Bishop of Salzburg remonstrated, ignoring the apostolic mission of Methodius; a synod at Ratisbon deposed Methodius and held him a prisoner for two years. Pope John ordered that he be set free, reinstated him in his rights, but, by his legates, rejected the introduction of the Slav language into the liturgy. When, c. 879, the orthodoxy of his preaching and teaching was called into doubt, he went to Rome, justified himself, but had to promise that he would use the Latin language at Mass; the German bishop of Neitra was given him as suffragan. The dissensions between the Latin and Greek, the German and Slav clergy continued to the death of S. Methodius. The Slav language disappeared from the Mass in Moravia, but was continued in the Southern Slav countries by the disciples of Methodius. In 882, he made a third journey to Constantinople. D. at Welehrad in Moravia, 6 Apr., 885. His disciples (v. S. Gorazd) were exiled after 885; the newly founded hierarchy disappeared during the Magyar invasion (900); Moravia, in 950, became part of the diocese of Ratisbon, in 973 of the diocese of Prague. On the cult of S. Methodius, v. S. Cyril.—Mrt.—C. E.—Biogr.—W.W.

Michael, the Archangel; one of the principal angels; his name was the war cry of the good angels in the battle fought in Heaven against Satan and his followers. He may be the greatest of all angels (S. Basil, Bellarmine) or the prince of the Seraphim (Bonaventure), or the leader of the lowest choir, the Angels (S. Thomas). A hymn in the Mozarabic Breviary places him above the twenty-four Elders. Christian tradition gives to him four offices: (1) to fight against Satan; (2) to rescue the souls of the faithful from the power of the Devil, especially at the hour of death; (3) to defend God's people: the Jews in the Old Law and the Christians in the New Dispensation; (4) to call from earth and bring men's souls to the judgment. In his oldest shrine, at Chairitopa near Colossae in Phrygia, he caused a medicinal spring to spout, in which the sick bathed; also other curative springs at Colossae (Khonas on the river Lycus in Phrygia), at Pythia in Bithynia, and elsewhere in Asia, were dedicated to S. Michael. At the Sosthenion, 50 miles southwest of Constantinople, the sick slept in his church to await the manifestation of S. Michael. The thermal baths of Arcadius at Constantinople were dedicated to him. In Egypt he was invoked for the rising of the Nile (F. 12 June). At Rome his most ancient church was on the Salarian Way (disappeared a thousand years ago) and on the Moles Hadriani (Castel di Sant' Angelo). At his famous shrine on Monte Gargano (Apulia) he was venerated as the protector of the citizens of Sipontum against the pirates. At his great sanctuary of Mont St-Michel in Normandy he was the patron of mariners. In Germany, S. Michael took the place of Wuotan, who had his holy places on the mountain tops. He is patron of knights (soldiers) and grocers (scales). F. 29 Sept. in the Latin Church, dp. 2 cl. (dedication of the church on the Salarian Road) and 8 May dp. maj. (Apparition of S. Michael on Mt. Moses, the Ethiopian, hermit, M. He was a gigantic negro slave, a government employee; turned out of service for bad conduct, he became the chief of a gang of robbers, the terror of the country along the frontiers of Egypt. Obligated to take refuge among the solitaries of the desert to escape pursuit for his crimes, he was converted by them and became a hermit. He was ordained to the priesthood by the Patriarch Theophilus of Alexandria, and retired to the desert of Scete. He is said to have had seven brothers, whom he converted. D. about 395, after having led many of his former associates to penance; he was probably killed by Beduins. His body is venerated at Dair-el-Baramus monastery in Egypt. F. 28 Aug., Rom. Mart.; full office in the Greek and Syrian Churches. In the Coptic Church, full office, 18 June. His name is in the diptychs of the Coptic Mass of S. Basil.—Par. 215.—H. F.—Jac., 285.—Eg., 106.

Moses, Elias, and Daniel, Mm., Sons of King Sanassan, of the Mazchites, in Armenia with "3970" companions; they were disciples of S. Gregory the Albanian; by order of their father they were killed on Mt. Corozvou; 4th century. F. 8 Sept. in the Armenian Church.—Nill., II.

Moses, Prophet, leader and lawgiver of Israel. He was the son of Amram and Jochebed, of the tribe of Levi; b. in Egypt at the time of the hardest oppression of the Jewish nation. Exposed on the Nile, he was saved by a daughter of the Pharaoh (Thutmosis III, 1515-1461?) and educated in the royal palace. Having killed an Egyptian, he fled into the desert of Midian, married Sephora, the daughter of the priest Reguel-Jethro. Summoned by the miracle of the burning bush, he went to Egypt to deliver his oppressed people. After two audiences before the Pharaoh (Amenophis, 1461-36?), God sent the ten plagues. Then followed the exodus. Moses led the Israelites through the Red Sea (Bitter Lake) into the desert of Mt. Horeb and conquered the Amalekites. Three months after the exodus God gave the Ten Commandments on Mt. Sina. The journey through the Arabian Desert lasted 40 years. At last, after many sufferings and miraculous manifestations of God, M. led his people into the land east of the Jordan, which he gave to the tribes of Ruben, Gad, and half of Manasses. Having admonished the people to be faithful to God, he died, 120 years old, on Mt. Nebo in Moab, in view of the Promised Land, which he was not permitted to enter on account of his lack of faith in God's mercy. He is buried in the land of Moab, but no man knows where. The Epistle of Jude speaks of an altercation of the Devil with S. Michael concerning the body of Moses. Moses is the most eminent personage of the Old Testament, the liberator of his nation from slavery, the lawgiver of the Jewish theocracy, prophet and inspired author. Deep national sentiment, prudent energy, great patience and meekness promoted his work for his obstinate people. He is an eminent type of Christ. His name is in the Proskomide of the Greek Mass. F. 4 Sept., Rom. Mart., dp. at Jerusalem and Venice, full office in the Greek Church; in the Coptic Church 10 Feb.; 10 May and 5 Sept. Rb. Sl. The Maronites and Melchites keep his feast on 5 Aug. C. E.—Buch.—W.W.—Dand., IV, 37.

Moses of Choren (Chorni), prov. of Taron, Armenia, called "the Philologist" or "Gram-

Nabor, M., at Rome; v. S. Basilides, 12 June.

Nabor and Felix, Mm. They were Moorish soldiers in the army of Emp. Maximianus Hercules, who were tried and sentenced for their faith at Milan and finally beheaded there (not at Lodi), about 303. Over their tomb in Milan was built a basilica, in which S. Ambrose, in 386, discovered the bodies of S. Gervasius and Protasius. Archbishop Rainald (in 1164) is said to have brought their relics to the cathedral of Cologne. Nabor and Felix are probably identical with Ss. Nabor and Felix, the companions of S. Januarius of Mauretania. Since the "acts" of the Martyrs of Milan are spurious, some martyrologists concluded, that Ss. Nabor and Felix suffered in Mauretania and that their bodies were transferred to Milan. But the repetition of the names under Januarius may be one of the innumerable blunders of the copyists found in the old sources. F. 12 July Rom. Mart. simpl. in the Latin Ch.; solemn at Milan; dp. maj. (Pmp.) at Lodi; and in the Cathedral of Cologne. They are mentioned in the Ambrosian Canon of the Mass.—P. B.—L. S.—Buch.—C. Nepos, M., in Africa; v. S. Quirinus, 3 June.

Nepotianus, M.; v. S. Anatolius, 7 Feb.

Nepotianus, priest of Altinum near Venice, a nephew of S. Heliodorus, Bp. of Altinum; he forsook a splendid career in the imperial body guard, and attached himself to his uncle, who ordained him priest. S. Jerome dedicated to him a valuable monastic and ascetic treatise on the sacerdotal life, and when Nepotianus died (395), he sent a touching letter of condolence to S. Heliodorus, describing the piety and zeal of the young priest. F. 4 May.—Buch.—H. L.

Nepotianus, fifth Bp. of Clermont; b. in the Auvergne, successor to S. Allyre; d. about 388; his relics are in the church of S. Allyre. F. 22 Oct.—P. B.

Nera Tolomei (B.), V. of Siena, 3rd O. P. Because she refused to marry, she was locked up in a prison by her mother. Our Lord, surrounded by his angels, often appeared to her. When restored to liberty she placed herself under the guidance of Bl. Ambrose Sansedoni. D. in 1287. She is venerated in the church of S. Dominic at Siena.—P. B., 25 Dec.

Nereus, M., in Africa; v. Magulus, 11 May.

Nereus and Achilleus, Roman Mm. According to the inscription on their tomb, composed by Pope Damasus, they were pretorian soldiers, not eunuchs, as the late "acts" (6th century) pretend. They are said to have been baptized by S. Peter, entered the service of S. Flavia Domitilla, and were exiled with her to the isle of Pontia (Ponza) and later to Terracina, where they were beheaded under Domitian (or Trajan?) and buried in the family vault in the catacomb of S. Domitilla on the Road to Ardea

Their tomb, with the subterranean basilica, was built by Pope Siricius, in 390, and was rediscovered in 1874. The relics had been brought to their titular church "Fasciola," from there to S. Adriano, 12 May, 1597, back to the Fasciola, the heads to the Chiesa Nuova. F. 12 May, Rom. Mart. sem. in the Latin Church; 26 Apr. in the modern Coptic (Cath.) Church.—P. B.—L. S.—Buch.—C. E.—Chev., 3299.

Neros, M. F. 11 July in the Abyssinian Church.

Nerses (Narses), M., at Bardiaboch; v. S. Elias, 27 March.

Nerses, of Lambron, archbp. of Tarsus in Cilicia. B. in 1153, son of the Armenian prince Oship of Lambron and of Sanducht (a scion of S. Gregory the Illuminator), nephew of the patriarch S. Nerses IV, Shnorhali; he was educated in Skeyra monastery, spoke Latin, Greek, Syrian, Coptic, and Armenian. After the death of his father he resigned his splendid worldly career (1168), received Holy Orders at Hromkla (1179), and led a solitary life near Tarsus. In 1176, he was elected archbp. of Tarsus; by his renowned speech at Hromkla (1179) he led the Armenian nation back to temporary reunion with Rome. Leo II of Cilicia was crowned by the Papal Legate, 6 Jan., 1198. S. Nerses translated many Western works into the Armenian language. D. 17 July, 1198. F. 17 July in the Armenian Church.—Buch.—Nill.—Web.—C. E.—Chev., 3301.—Nill., II, 598.

* Nerses IV, Katholikos of Armenia, 1166-73, Doctor of the Armenian Church. He resided at Hromkla (i. e., Roman castle), and hence is called "Klaetzi," also "Shnorhali," the Elegant; by his mother he was a scion of S. Gregory the Illuminator; he was ordained priest and bishop by his brother Gregory III (1113-66), took part in the Latin synod at Antioch (1139), and endeavored to effect a union between the Greek and Armenian Churches. He was one of the greatest Armenian writers and one of the most eminent men the Armenian nation ever brought forth; he was an orator and liturgical poet; he composed three great epic poems on the history of Armenia, Jesus Christ, and the fall of Edessa. D. in 1173. F. in the Armenian Church, 3 Aug. (office with that of the Armenian Doctors: Monday after the third Sunday after the Assumption).—Buch.—Nill.—Web.—C. E.—Chev., 3301.—Nilles, II, 598.

Nerses I, "the Great," 7th Katholikos and reformer of the Armenian Church; grandson of S. Hussik. Educated in Cappadocia, he selected the military career and married Sanducht, of the noble Mamekunian family; by her he became father of S. Isaac the Great. He returned to Armenia after the death of King Tiran and, after his wife's death, was appointed chamberlain to King Arshak. In 353, he was consecrated patriarch by force. He held a synod for the reform of discipline at Ashtishat, founded hospitals and orphanages, and brought the Church nearer to the people. Banished by King Arshak, whom some of his reforms displeased, and by the Arian Emp. Valens, he was recalled later, but poisoned by the dissolute King Pap, in 373. His name is daily mentioned in the Armenian liturgy. F. 19 Nov. (Office 5th Monday after Pentecost.)—Buch.—Web. 287—C. E.—Nill., II, 584.

Nerses (Narses), Bp. of Sahgerd in Beht Garmal, his disciple Joseph; John, Shapur (Sapor, Saverius), Isaac and Hypatius, Bps.; Azotus (eunuch), Sazonius, Thecla, Baula, Denachis, Anna, and companions, Mm., in Persia. Nerses was decapitated by command of Ardassir, son of Shapur II. Shapur died in prison; Isaac, etc., were stoned; Azotus was strangled by an apostate priest, the rest beheaded. F. 20 Nov., MGr.—Mz. Mrt.—Pers.

Nerusia Euticia, M.; v. Euticia. Her relics, in 1803, were brought from Rome to Forlì, where they were venerated in the chapel of Count Savorelli; there two feasts were celebrated in her honor: 16 July, Finding; 16 Nov., Translation; in 1878, her relics were brought to the chapel of the Sisters of St. Joseph, Carondelet, St. Louis, Mo.

Nestor, hermit and monk in Greece. F. 26 Apr., MGr.

Nestor, M., one of the martyrs at Gaza in Palestine under the apostate Emperor Julian. He was quite a youth, a cousin of S. Eusebius, Ss. Nestabus, and Zeno; he was dragged with them through the streets, but moved by his personal beauty and amiability the crowd insisted rather on his being left to die by the wayside. There he was found by his friend and carried to the house of Zeno (later Bp. of Gaza), where he expired, whilst his wounds were being dressed, in 302. He had taken part in the destruction of the magnificent pagan temple, called "Marmion." F. 8 Sept. Rom. Mart.; dp. at Jerusalem.—L. S.—Rams.

Nestor, M., alleged friend of S. Demetrius of Thessalonica; when he saw how the giant Lykaïos, a favorite of Emp. Maximian Herculeus, killed the Christians at the public games, he entered the stadion and vanquished him; wherefore both he (Nestor) and Demetrius were slain, in 306. The story is fabulous. F. 8 Oct., Rom. Mart.; 27 Oct., full office in the Greek Church.—MGr.—H. L.—P. B.—Syn., 91 (26 Oct.)

* Nestor, "the Chronicler," C. Born in 1056, at Beloozero in Russia; he took the habit in the Great Cave monastery of Kiev (1074); famous are his annals of the Slav nation from the deluge to 882, and of the Russian nation till 1110; he also wrote the lives of several saints. D. about 1114. F. 27 Oct.—Mrt.—Mz.—Buch.—Chev., 3303.

* Nestorius, patriarch of Constantinople, one of the three "Greek" Doctors of the Nestorian (Persian or Chaldean) Church; b. at Germanicia in Syria Euphratensis, he became a disciple of Theodore of Mopsvestia, a monk at Euprepus monastery, and priest at the great church in Antioch. In 428, he was elected patriarch of Constantinople; he showed great zeal against the Arians, Macedonians, Quartodecimans, and Novatians, but when, in the spring of 429, he denied to the Bl. Virgin the title "Theotokos" and espoused the heretical ideas of Diodorus of Tarsus and Theodore of Mopsvestia, regarding the double personality of Christ, he was condemned at the Council of Ephesus, 7 June, 431. He retired to Euprepus monastery, but, in 438, was exiled to the Libyan Desert. D. in June, 451, at Panopolis in the Thebaid. His writings are very numerous. F. 5th Friday after Epiphany in the Nestorian Church.—Nill.—Buch.—C. E.—Chev., 3304.—Fort., 55.

Nice, V., M., of the fictitious cycle of S. George. F. 25 Apr., MGr.

Nice, First Council of (325). In 518, under the Emperor Justinus, the Greek Church introduced the memory of the Fathers of the first four Ecumenical Councils, including the 318 Fathers of the Nicene Council. In the 14th century, however, a new feast was instituted in honor of these 318 Fathers alone, for the Sunday before Pentecost. The Armenians keep the memory of these Fathers on the Saturday before the 4th Sunday after the Assumption of the Bl. V. Mary; the Copts celebrated the Nicaenum on 5 Nov., the Abyssinians on 21 Sept., the Maronites on 15 Sept.—Syn., 107.—Nill.

Nice, Second Council of (787). In 892,

55 years after this Council, the feast of "Orthodoxy" was instituted in the Greek Church, to celebrate the restitution of the cult of images. In the 14th century, another feast was introduced by the Greeks for the Sunday after Oct. 10 to honor the Fathers of the Nicaenum II. This celebration was changed into a feast of propaganda by the schismatics against the Latin Church. The Catholic Copts observe the memory of this Council on Sept. 14.—11 Oct., Ter Israel.

Niceanus, Chrysogonus, and Marcus, alleged bishops of Capua. F. 23 Nov.—H. L.

Niceas (Nicetas), Bp. of Remessiana (Romatiana), in Mediterranean Dacia (not of Aquileja), preached the Gospel to the Goths, Dacians, and Scythians on the Lower Danube. He was a personal friend of S. Paulinus of Nola, and was of Roman, not of Slav descent. Paulinus praises him as a hymn writer. D. 22 June, 414. F. 22 June, Rom. Mart.—C. E.—Chev., 3317.

Niceas, alleged patriarch of Aquileja after the destruction of the city by the Huns (452). Probably he was only a subdeacon. D. in 485. He has been confounded with Niceas of Remessiana. F. 22 June dp. at Udine and in Istria.—Off. pr. Udine.

Nicephorus, of Ossuna; v. S. Arcadius, 19 Jan.

Nicephorus and Stephanus, Greek Mm., who were flayed alive. F. 8 Feb. MGr. Mz.

Nicephorus, M. He was a Syrian Christian, who is said to have suffered martyrdom at Antioch, under Valerian, about 259. According to the touching story of his passion, the priest Sapricius, on his way to execution, in spite of repeated appeals, refused to forgive the layman Nicephorus a former affront. Weakening at the last moment, the priest apostatized and offered sacrifice to the gods. In his stead Nicephorus, who loudly professed his faith, was held and decapitated, receiving the crown of "humility, faith, and charity." Probably the story is pure fiction (or part of a homily on Matth. XVIII, 21 ss.), and its hero the creation of a poet (Delehay). Allard defends the authenticity of the account. F. 9 Feb., Rom. Mart. dp. at Trieste; in the Greek and Syrian Churches, full office.—Ruin., 283.—P. B.—L. S.—Buch.

* Nicephorus (Nikephor), C., a monk in the monastery of S. Alexander of Swir, later a hermit near the Nikephor monastery, on Lake Washe-osero in Russia; d. in 1550. F. 9 Feb., Mrt. Mz.

Nicephorus, M., at Nicomedia; v. S. Saturninus, 6 March.

Nicephorus, M., at Corinth; v. S. Codratus, 10 March.

Nicephorus, Patriarch of Constantinople, C., the principal champion of orthodoxy in the second contest over the cult of images. B. in 758; like his Catholic father, he was imperial secretary and commissioner of the Emperor at the second Council of Nice (787). Though a layman, he was designated Patriarch of Constantinople by Emp. Nicephorus (12 Apr., 806). This uncanonical election and the reinstatement of the priest Joseph in the adultery (Moechia) controversy drew upon him the hostility of the Studites (monks' party). At the second outbreak of Iconoclasm (815) Nicephorus defended the cult of images and was exiled by Leo V to the monastery of S. Theodore on the Eastern shore of the Bosphorus (a monastery which he himself had founded when still a layman). There he remained to his death, 2 June, 828. His body was transferred from Prokenesus isle to Constantinople and deposited in the church of the Apostles, 13 March, 846. F. 13 March, Rom. Mart.; dp. at Constantinople (Latin); in the Greek Church he has two feasts with full office: 2 June (death) and 13 March (tr. rel.).—P. B.—Buch.—C. E.—Chev. 3312.—Biogr.

* Niceras, V., at Constantinople, under Emp. Arcadius = S. Nicaretus. F. 27 Dec., Rom. Mart.

Nicetas (Niceas), Bp. of Dacia, C. He came to Rome in 397 and repeatedly visited his friend S. Paulinus of Nola, who composed a poem in his honor. He preached the Gospel to the Scythian and Gothic tribes in Dacia. Baronius opposes the opinion that he is identical with S. Niceas, Bp. of Remesiana, of 22 June. Modern writers, however, identify the two (C. E. XI, 52). F. 7 Jan., Rom. Mart.; at Bucharest, 20 Feb. dp.; in Albania 20 March; v. S. Niceas of Kemesiana.—P. B.—Buch.—C. E.

* Nicetas (Nikita), C., monk at Kiev and bishop at Novgorod (1095); by his prayers he obtained rain and extinguished a great conflagration; d. in 1108. F. 31 Jan. Tr. rel. 20 Apr., 1558, Mrt. Mz. He is mentioned daily in the Russian Mass.

Nicetas, C., of Pythii, a formerly famous watering place in Bithynia. F. 4 Feb., Mrt.

Nicetas, C., Bp. of Apollonias in Bithynia. The Iconoclast Emp. Leo the Armenian, repeatedly sent him into exile to Anatolia, where he died, in 733. F. 20 March, MGR. Mz.

Nicetas, abbot, C. Born at Caesarea in Bithynia, a monk and abbot in Medikios monastery near Brussa (Asia Minor), who suffered much for the cult of images under Leo the Armenian; he was banished to the isle of Glyceria, where he lived in a miserable prison for six years. Under Michael the Stammerer, he was set free and died in peace in a hermitage near Constantinople, 5 Apr., 824. F. 3 Apr., Rom. Mart.; full office in the Greek Church.—P. B.

* Nicetas, M.; b. in Albania of Slav parents; he was a monk in the great Russian monastery of S. Pantaleon on Mt. Athos; because he preached against Islamism, he was hanged at Serres in Macedonia, in 1808. F. 4 Apr. Mz.

* Nicetas, Cyrillus, Nicephorus, Niphon, Clemens, and Isaac, Cc., were noble citizens of Novgorod (Russia), relatives of the Wo-jewoda Alphan; they founded the great Sokolnitzki monastery, in 1389. Their relics were brought to S. Antony's monastery, in 1775. They are called "Wonder Workers." F. 4 May (instituted in 1809) at Novgorod.—Mz.

Nicetas (Nicetius), Bp. of Vienne in France; he was educated by Ss. Paschasius and Claudius of Vienne and was present at the synod of Valence (375); d. in 379, and was buried in the church of S. Martin, Bp., M., which he had built. F. 5 May, Rom. Mart.

Nicetas, John, and Joseph, Cc., founded a monastery on the isle of Chios, 11th century. F. 20 May, Mz.

* Nicetas, Stylites, M., Wonder Worker of Perejaslawl, Russia; he had been a tax-gatherer; after his conversion he took the Basilian habit at Perejaslawl, where he mounted a column; he was killed by robbers, in 1186. F. 23 May in all Russia.—Mrt. Mz.

Nicetas, Bp. of Chalcedon, C.; he was a zealous champion of the cult of images, and was sent into exile by Emperor Leo the Armenian. D. at Chalcedon, 9th century. F. 28 May.—P. B.

Nicetas of Trani = Nicolas of Trani, 2 June.

* Nicetas of Nirus, M.; b. on the isle of Nirus, near Rhodes; islamized in boyhood, he returned to the Christian faith when he attained manhood; he was beheaded by the Turks on the isle of Chios, in 1732. F. 21 June, Mz.

Nicetas and Aquila, Mm., mythical soldiers said to have been converted by S. Christopher; the apocryphal "acts" have changed them into women (Niceta and Aquilina), harlots, sent to seduce S. Christopher and to lead him to renounce Christ in prison. He, however, converted them; therefore they were executed. Perhaps they are identical with Nicetas and Aquila of the Clementines, disciples of Simon, the Magician, converted by S. Peter; these also are purely apocryphal. F. 24 July, Rom. Mart. 9 May, MGr.—L. S.—H. L.

Nicetas, M., in Africa; v. S. Felix, 29 July.

* Nicetas, "the Wonder Worker," C., a Syrian saint. 4 Aug. Rb. Sl.

Nicetas, M., probably under Maximian at Nicomedia. He was an alleged son of Emp. Maximian. His "acts," however, are purely fabulous and nothing is certain except the existence of his relics in S. Raphael's Church, Venice. F. 12 Sept. dp. only in S. Raphael's Church (lessons approved by Clement VIII). —L. S.—Buch.

Nicetas, M. (Megalomartyr), patron of the Arian Goths. He was b. of a rich and noble Gothic family; through ignorance he may have been an Arian; the persecution under King Athanaric broke out in 377, in revenge for the declaration of war against the Goths by Emp. Gratian. Nicetas probably was ordained priest by Ulfilas (who, in 376, attached himself to the Arian sect). Nicetas was burnt at the stake by order of the pagan King Athanaric, in 378, in Moldavia (Bessarabia). His relics were brought to Mopsvestia in Cilicia where they were enshrined on Sept. 15, 378; from Mopsvestia the cult of this Teutonic (Arian) priest spread through the Greek Church. F. 15 Sept., Rom. Mart.; full office in the Greek and Syrian Churches. His patronage 19 Jan. dp. maj. at Melendugno, diocese of Lecce in Apulia.—L. S.—Buch.—Chev., 3316.—Thr. M., 284, 209. 12 Sept. at Venice.

Nicetas (Nikita), the Patrician, C.; b. in Paphlagonia; he was prefect of Cilicia under Emperor Nicephorus. After the Emperor's death (811) he left the world and took a monk's tonsure at Chrysonike, Constantinople; under Leo the Armenian and Theophilus, he was driven from place to place. D. in exile at Catisia, in 838. F. 6 (13) Oct., MGr. dp. 16 Oct. at Messina.—L. S.

* Nicetas, new martyr. F. 17 Dec., Mz.

Nicetius, 23d Bp. of Besançon, 6th-7th century. He succeeded Silvester II, about 590, and restored the episcopal see to Besançon, which had been transferred to Nyon on the Lake of Geneva after the destruction of Besançon by the Huns. He also dedicated the abbey church of Luxeuil, founded by S. Columban. D. 8 Feb., 613. He is patron of Mailly (Haute-Saône). F. 31 Jan.; dp. at Besançon.—P. B.—Mg.

Nicetius (Nizier), Bp. ("patriarch") of Lyons, 551-73. He was born of a Burgundian senatorial family, a nephew and successor of S. Sacerdos; he was ordained priest in 543, held two provincial synods, in 567; was an energetic ruler, well deserved also of ecclesiastical chant. D. 2 Apr., 573. His body was found in his own church at Besançon, in 1308. F. 7 Apr. dp. at Lyons and Belley.—P. B.—Mg.

Nicetius, M., at Verona; v. S. Felix, 2 Aug.

Nicetius, M.; v. S. Caitius, 10 Oct.

Nicetius, Bp. of Treves, C., a native of the Auvergne; at first monk and abbot in his home province; in 527 (532?), he was elected successor to S. Abrunculus of Treves. He was the last Celto-Roman bishop of Treves, at a time when, after the disorders of the Migration of Nations, Frankish supremacy began in what had been Roman Gaul. He had the ruined cathedral restored by Italian workmen and trained a pious and learned clergy. He excommunicated kings

Theudebert I and Chlotar I for their debaucheries. Exiled by Chlotar (560), he was honorably restored by Sigebert (561). He remonstrated with Emp. Justinian for his heretical edict in favor of Monophysitism. D. at Treves, in 566, and was buried in the church of S. Maximin. F. 5 Dec., Rom. Mart.; at Treves, 1 Oct. dp. maj.—L. S.—Buch.—C. E.—P. Nicolas of Trani, "the Pilgrim" (Peregrinus), C. Born near Sterion in Achaja (Greece). Because of his incessant loud crying: "Kyrie, eleison!" in the public streets he was declared to be a maniac, put in chains, maltreated, and at last driven away. So far his story is absolutely apocryphal. Historically established is the fact that he crossed the sea from Greece, and wandered through Apulia; Crowds of people, especially boys, followed him, uttering the same cry for mercy: "Kyrie, eleison!" He d. at Trani, at the age of nineteen years, an unknown stranger, 2 June, 1094. Canonized by Urban II, in 1098 (?). His life is disfigured by folklore. Nicolas I, C., Pope, 24 Apr. 858-67. He was a Roman nobleman, influential in ecclesiastical affairs under Benedict II. S. Nicolas was one of the greatest Popes and exerted a decisive influence upon the historical development of the papacy and its position amongst the Christian nations of Western Europe. He was a man of indomitable will-power, sharp penetration, and intrepid courage, sent by God to His Church, when Christendom seemed on the brink of anarchy. He defended the rights of Christ's Vicar against princes and metropolitans, especially against the violent Archbp. John of Ravenna, who oppressed clergy and people alike (861); also against Hincmar of Reims, in the matter of Bp. Rothard of Soissons and the clergy ordained by Ebbo. The matrimonial statutes he upheld against King Lothar. He excommunicated Lothar, and the latter's brother, Louis II, besieged him in S. Peter's. In a letter to the patriarchs of the East (8 May, 862), Nicolas called upon them to refuse obedience to Photius, the intruder at Constantinople, and at a Roman synod (Apr., 863) excommunicated Photius. He confirmed S. Anscar, archbp. of Bremen, as papal legate to the Danes, Swedes, and Slavs. He exhaustively answered the 105 questions of Prince Bogoris of Eulgaria on the teaching and discipline of the Church. Regino of Prüm calls him a second Elias, who commanded the kings and tyrants as if he were the Lord of the globe. D. 13 Nov., 867. F. 13 Nov., Rom. Mart.; dp. at Rome.—P. B.—L. S.—Buch.—C. * Nicolas (?), killed by the Turks at Constantinople (7), in 1732. F. 12 Nov., Mz.

Nicolas of Myra, Bp., C., the most popular saint in Christendom, highly celebrated by all nations, especially by the schismatic Russian Church. Numberless churches and chapels are dedicated to him. Scarcely anything is historically certain about him, except that he was bishop of Myra in Lycia (Asia Minor) in the 4th century. But legend has supplied the deficiency with abundant material for an interesting history of the saint. His "Life," written by Simeon Metaphrastes (10th cent.), is a collection of edifying anecdotes, unreliable stories and exaggerated miracles without historical value. According to this life he was b. at Patara in Lycia and had the gift of miracles in childhood. After a pilgrimage to the Holy Land and Egypt, he was miraculously elected bishop of Myra (325). He became celebrated for deeds and miracles of charity. He is said to have suffered imprisonment during the persecution of Diocletian up to the time of Constantine, and to have taken part in the Nicene Council (325), where with all his force he dealt a blow at the jaw of the heretic Arius. D. 6 Dec., betw. 345 and 352. In the 6th century Justinian I built a church in his honor at Constantinople. In 1087, his relics were stolen at Myra by merchants from Bari (Apulia); they now are venerated in the crypt of S. Nicolò at Bari. From his bones flows a liquid alleged to possess curative powers (S. Nicolas' Oil; Manna di San Nicolò). In Italy, his cult originated after the translation of his relics. To Germany his veneration was brought by Theophano, the wife of Emp. Otto II. He is patron of Russia, Apulia, Lorraine (Pmp.), Limerick, of mariners, merchants, coopers, pawnbrokers (the three balls = three bags of gold), travellers, bakers and brewers. F. 6 Dec., Rom. Nicomedia, Mm. of. 1003 Martyrs, reputed servants of the courtiers (protectors) Ss. Bassus, Eusebius, Eutychius, and Basilides (20 Jan.) are mentioned in the MGr., 7 Feb. They were beheaded two weeks after their masters at Nicomedia. Their story, however, is unreliable. 12 Feb., Mrt.

Nicomedia, Mm. of. One Thousand (10,000?) Mm., who were beheaded at Nicomedia, are mentioned in the MGr., 18 March. The city was the residence of Emp. Diocletian and had a large Christian population; it was at Nicomedia that Diocletian initiated his fierce persecution (24 Feb. 303). The number of martyrs at that place is variously estimated at from ten thousand to twenty-three thousand. Rams. The Rom. Mart. on 18 March gives the number 10,000 who were killed when the persecution broke out. Among the martyrs are rightly reckoned also those Christians who were victims in massacres carried out by the pagan multitude irrespectively of the imperial law. Such massacres were encouraged or at least tolerated by the authorities.—Rams.—Mrt.

Nicomedia, Mm. of. Five Mm. of Nicomedia are mentioned in Mrt., 16 June; 25, on 1 July.

Nicomedia, 25 Martyrs of. 1 July, Mrt.

Nicomedia, Mm. of. 33 Martyrs at Nicomedia are given by Mrt. 28 Aug.

Nicomedia, Mm. of. 3618 Mm., under Maximian, are mentioned by the MGr. on 2 Sept.

Nicomedia, Mm. of. Two hundred Mm., companions of S. Eulampius of Nicomedia, are mentioned by Mrt. on 10 Oct.

Nicomedia, Mm. of. Thirty (130?) women, Mm., converted during the martyrdom of S. Juliana of Nicomedia, are given in the MGr., 21 Dec. The same rubric adds 500 men. The story of S. Juliana is apocryphal.

Nicomedia, Mm. of. Twenty Mm., under Diocletian; Rom. Mart., 23 Dec.

Nicomedia, Mm. of. Several thousand (the Greeks say 20,000) Christians were burned in the great church of Nicomedia by order of Diocletian, whilst assembled there to celebrate Christmas, in 303. Full office of 28 Dec. in the Greek Church; Rom. Mart., 25 Dec. Because Christmas (25 Dec.) was certainly unknown at Nicomedia, in 303, some assign these martyrs to the realm of mythology. The circumstance that they were killed on Christmas may have been added by a later legend; or they were killed on 6 Jan., since it is probable that Epiphany was celebrated in the Orient at the end of the 3d century. The great church of Nicomedia, however, was not destroyed by fire, but by professional wreckers, on 23 Feb., 303; the historical account does not speak of any victims who lost their lives.—L. S.

Nicomedia. Ten Virgins, Mm., at Nicomedia, whose eyes were plucked out, are commemorated in the MGr., 31 Dec.

Nicomenes, M., in Phrygia; v. S. Tarsus, 27 Oct.

Nicon, Bp., and his 199 (179) disciples, monks, Mm. Nicon, a native of Naples, was a pagan soldier who, whilst traveling in the East, was converted by B. Theodosius of Cyzicus and lived with him in the desert of Mt. Ganos. Before Theodosius died, he made him superior of his 199 disciples and consecrated him regionary bishop. Because of the persecution, Nikon, with his ascetes, crossed over to Sicily, where all were killed, under Decius, in 251. F. 23 March. The Rom. Mart. erroneously ascribes these saints to Caesarea in Palestine. At Messina and Jerusalem (false) dp. The Greeks give them the full office of 23 March.—H. L.—Rams.

Nicon, abbot. He was a Greek priest and joined S. Antony, when the latter founded the Petsherskoi (Cave) monastery at Kiev, Russia. Because he gave the habit to two Boljarin, Ss. Barlaam and Ephrem, he was persecuted and exiled by the Grand Duke Isjaslav. Nicon was elected Hegumenos (abbot) of the Cave monastery after Stephen; d. in 1088. During his exile (1068) he founded Tmutarakany monastery. F. 23 March, Mz. Mrt.

Nicon, M., in Phrygia; v. S. Neon, 13 July.

Nilus = Nicolas.

Nilus, "the Wise," who witnessed the massacre of the monks of Mt. Sina and wrote an account of it; he is the father of S. Theodulus; 5th century. F. 14 Jan., Mrt. He is identical with S. Nilus the Elder, 12 Nov.

Nilus, Bp., M., who with the Bps. Tyrannion, Silvanus, and Peleus, the priest Zenobius and a great number of lay people were done to death at Tyrus in Phenicia, about 304. 20 Feb.—P. B.

* Nilus Sorski, abbot, C., of the Boljarin family Majkow; he took the habit at Bjelopersk, Russia, and founded a monastery at Sora, gov. Novgorod, to which he gave a very severe rule, similar to that of the Carthusians; only twelve monks remained with him. He d. in 1508. F. 7 Apr., Mz. Mrt.

Nilus, Bp., M., in Palestine; v. S. Peleus, 19 Sept.

Nilus, Bp., M., at Phaenos; v. S. Patermuthius, 19 Sept.

* Nilus Stolbenski, C., a hermit; b. in the Waldai district in Russia; having taken the habit in Kripenski monastery, he founded a hermitage on Stolbenski island, lake Seliger, where he d. in 1533. After his death a monastery was built over his tomb; his relics were found in 1667. F. 7 Dec. and 27 May (Tr. rel.), Mz. Mrt.

Nilus, "the Younger," or "of Rossano," abbot; b. at Rossano, in Calabria, about 910, of Italo-Greek descent. In his youth he had committed a sin which he deemed so heinous as to call for a lifelong penance. Hence he left the world (he was probably married) and took the habit of S. Basil at Rossano. Having lived in different monasteries (Mte. Cassino, S. Alessio), studying the Scriptures and the Fathers, he settled in a hermitage near Rossano. He was highly celebrated for his wisdom and his miracles. Some years before his death, driven from his retreat, he founded the abbey of Grottaferrata in the mountains of Albano near Rome; later on he lived in the solitude of Valleluce, near Gaëta. D. at S. Agata, near Frascati, 27 Dec., 1005. F. 26 Sept., Rom. Mart. dp. at Gaëta, Frascati, and by the Latin Basilians. At Grottaferrata, full office; at Rossano (princ. patron), dp. 1 cl. oct.; his Patronage dp. maj. 1st Sunday in Nov.—P. B.—L. S.—Buch.—C. E.

Nilus, "the Elder," "the Faster," "the Wise" or "the Sinaite," abbot; one of the fervent defenders of S. John Chrysostom and a leading ascetical writer of the 5th century. B. at Constantinople and instructed in piety by S. John Chrysostom; he was prefect of Constantinople under Theodosius I and Arcadius. Shortly before 400, he took the habit on Mt. Sina with his son Theodulus. Theodulus was captured by barbarians (Blemmyan Arabs), but redeemed by the bishop of Eleasa and ordained with his father. Nilus, a master of the spiritual life, developed a fertile literary activity, writing in a flowery and elegant, but solid and deep style. He d. about 430. Emp. Justin the Younger brought his body to Constantinople and placed it in the church of Ss. Peter and Paul. F. 12 Nov., Rom. Mart.; full office in the Greek Church. He is commemorated daily in the Armenian Mass.—P. B.—L. S.—Buch.—C. E.—Chev. 3361.

* Nilus, C.; b. at Petra in Morea, and hermit on Mt. Athos, 17th century. His relics, from which a miraculous liquid (oil) flows, were found in 1815. F. 12 Nov., Mz.

Nimmia, M., at Augsburg; v. S. Hilaria, 12 Aug.

* Nine Saints of the Abyssinian Church; they were Coptic (Monophysite) monks, who, in the time of King Ameda, about 482, came to Abyssinia and revived or reorganized Christianity there. Their names were: Aragawi, Pantaleon, Garima, Alef, Saham, Afe, Likanos, Adimata, and Oz (or Guba). Their names show many variations in the Abyssinian tradition.—Fort., 297.

Ninfa = S. Nympha, 10 Nov.

Ninian (Ninnidh), Bp., C., the first Apostle of Christianity in Scotland (Southern Picts). B. in Cumberland, about 360; his father was a converted British chieftain. Ninian spent 15 years at Rome, was consecrated by S. Siricius, and sent to preach the Gospel in his native country and in the province of Valentia, between the wall of Antoninus and that of Severus. He built the white stone church (Candida Casa) at Witherne in Galloway (397). His work among the Picts seems to have had but a shortlived success; his converts abandoned Christianity. He d. at Witherne, 16 Sept., 432. Many churches are dedicated to him in Scotland. His relics at Witherne are lost. F. in Scotland, 16 Sept. dp. 2 cl.; in Galloway (prin. patron) dp. 1 cl. oct.—Barr., 124.—O'H., IX, 385.—L. S.—Buch.—C. E.—Chev., 3364.—Ftpr., 77, 186.—Moran, 127.

Ninnoc (Nennoca), V., abbess, a daughter of Brychan of Wales; according to the Armorican tradition she left Britain about 448 and, with some companions, led a solitary life at Pleumeur, Brittany, where she established a monastery and died, in 486. Her true name was "Gwengustle" (Ninnoc means "little nun.") At Skaer she is called Gwen or Candida. F. 4 June; at Pleumeur 2nd Sunday in May.—B. G., IV, 16.—O'H., IV, 129.—P. B.—L. S.—Buch.

Nino, V., Apostle of Iberia (Georgia) in the Caucasus. B. at Colastri in Cappadocia; as a slave or captive she came to Georgia. She set such a fine example of continence and devotion that she impressed the imagination of the barbarians. The king's child, a baby, was ill; and the Queen sent it to several charmers and finally to Nino, by whose prayer the boy was restored. Whereupon King Mirian and his wife Nana believed and were baptized. Nino built the great church at Mtskheta and obtained missionaries from Constantine. D. about 325. The legend makes her a companion of S. Rhipsime. The Roman Mart. (15 Dec.), not knowing her name, calls her "Christiana." F. in Georgia and Russia, 14 Jan., Mrt., Mz. Tam. Bess. The Armenian Menology mentions her with S. Mania, 29 Oct. She is titular of the cathedral of Bodbeli, Kakheti, Georgia.—Bess.—Tam. 159.—Mrt.

Nonnus, C., Bp. of Heliopolis (Baalbek) in Syria. He had been a monk at Tabennisi in Egypt; in 448, he was elected bishop of Edessa; in 451, he went to Heliopolis, where he converted many Arabians. He is also said to have converted S. Pelagia, the Penitent. F. 2 Dec., Rom. Mart.; 9 Nov., Mrt.—H. L.

Norbert, archbp. of Magdeburg, founder of the Premonstratensians. B. about 1080, at Xanten on the Rhine; when subdeacon he was given a canonry at the church of S. Victor, Xanten; for a time he lived at the court of Archbp. Frederic of Cologne and of Emp. Henry V in a spirit of utter worldliness, but was thrown from his horse (28 May, 1115) during a thunderstorm, which led to a complete change. In penitential garb he went directly from Xanten to the Benedictine monastery of Siegburg. Shortly afterwards he was (irregularly) ordained priest and deacon on one day by Archbp. Frederic. After a vain attempt to reform the chapter of Xanten, persecuted and ridiculed, he resigned and gave his property to the poor. Barefooted he went (Nov., 1118) to St. Gilles in France, where he met Pope Gelasius II. The Pope heard his general confession, absolved him from irregularity, and gave him power to preach wherever he chose. After some months, by request of Pope Calixtus II, Norbert, with 13 companions, founded a monastic establishment near Lâon at Prémontré. They adopted the rule of S. Augustine (Christmas 1121). From Prémontré he went through France, Belgium, and Germany, announcing the word of God with fiery zeal. In 1124, he preached against the false mystic, Tanchelm, at Antwerp. His new Order was confirmed by Honorius II, 16 Feb., 1126. At the diet of Spire he was elected archbp. of Magdeburg, where he reformed his clergy, by force. In 1132, he accompanied Lothar II to Rome, to reinstate Pope Innocent II. He induced the Emperor to give up his claims to the right of investiture with ring and crozier. D. at Magdeburg, 6 June, 1134, and was buried in S. Mary's church. Emp. Ferdinand II took the relics from the Lutheran city and brought them to Strahow, Prague, 2 May, 1627. N. was canonized by Gregory XIII in 1582. F. 6 June, Rom. Mart.; dp. in the Latin Church (30 March, 1621); dp. maj. in Bohemia (minor patron). In the Premonstrat. Order; principal feast (since Odilo, C., "the Archangel of the Monks," fifth abbot of Cluny. B. about 962, in the Auvergne, of the noble house de Mercoeur. He was a canon at S. Julien at Brioude, but resigned and took the habit at Cluny, in 991; he became the coadjutor of S. Majolus in 992 and his successor in May, 994. Cluny owes its development to his affability and his talent for organization. Himself a man of prayer, he strengthened the monastic spirit and cultivated the liturgical services at Cluny and its dependencies. His numerous journeys (nine to Rome), his conferences with Popes, Emperors (Otto III, Henry II, Conrad III, and Henry III), kings (of France, Hungary, and Spain), and the most eminent bishops and magnates of his time, increased the power of Cluny and advanced its reforms in the entire Occident. The number of monasteries aggregated to Cluny rose from 37 to 65. Odilo paved the way for the great union of monasteries effected by S. Hugh. He introduced into his Congregation the Commemoration of All Souls (1031), which in a short time spread over the entire Church (2 Nov.). He wrote the Lives of S. Majolus and S. Adelheid; also some hymns. He died 31 Dec., 1048, whilst on a visitation at Souvigny. By the efforts of S. Peter Damian he was canonized in 1063. His relics at Souvigny were burned in 1793. Odo the Good, Archbp. of Canterbury; b. in England; of pagan Danish parents, in 875; having been educated for the service of the Church by the nobleman Aethelhelm, he was appointed Bp. of Wilton by King Athelstan, in 923, but spent most of his time at the court of the king. During the great battle of Brunaburg, at which he was present, he contributed by his persevering prayer to an important English victory over the Danes.

In 942, he succeeded Wulfhelm in the see of Canterbury. Before taking possession, he took the Benedictine habit from S. Abbo at Fleury; he restored the cathedral, replaced the secular canons in many English chapters by monks and, supporting the efforts of S. Dunstan, published constitutions for the reform of discipline. D. at Canterbury, 4 July, 959. F. 4 July, (not in the ancient Brev. of Canterbury).—St.—Buch.—L. S.—Chev., 3395.—Rams. (12 June).

Odo, C., Bp. of Urgel in Spain; b. of the counts of Barcelona, Gascony, and Urgel; at first he fought against the unruly nobles of the principality in various campaigns, then entered the service of the Church and was appointed archdeacon of Urgel; elected to the see of Urgel, in 1095, he was consecrated at Clermont by Urban II and reformed his sadly neglected diocese. Odo of Novara, (B.) abbot. O. Carth.; b. at Novara, in 1140; having taken the Carthusian habit at Cazottes, he was elected abbot of Tadera in Illyria, but resigned and retired to Tagliacozzo on Lake Fucino, where he lived in a solitary cell at the church of S. Cosmas; d. in 1230. Cult approved by Gregory IX. F. 14 Jan.—A. S.

Odo, (B.) first abbot of S. Marie d'Eaucourt, in Belgium; he was called by Lambert, Bp. of Arras, to coöperate with him in the care of souls; d. in 1140. F. 6 March (popular cult).—P. B.

Odo (B.), Bp. of Cambrai, ecclesiastical writer, O. S. B.; b. at Orléans, in 1050, he took the habit at Anchin and taught theology at Toul and Tournai; he was elected abbot of S. Martin's, Tournai, 4 March, 1095, and Bp. of Cambrai, 29 June, 1105. He was a realist in philosophy; in his school at Anchin he taught dialectics and astronomy. By studying S. Augustine's work "De Libero Arbitrio" he was led to embrace a life of severe asceticism; at first he adopted the rule of S. Augustine (1092), then (1095) that of S. Benedict; molested by the simonistic Bp. Walter, whose place he had taken, he resigned (1110) and retired to Anchin, where he died, 19 June, 1113. F. 19 June. Gall. Mart.—Buch.—P. B.—Chev., 3395.

Olaf (Tooley), M., king of Norway. 1015-1030. He was the son of King Harald Grenske; having spent his early youth as a pirate, he received baptism in Rouen, in 1010, at the age of 15 years. In 1015, he was, after much opposition, placed on the throne of Norway; he united the country into a political community, subjecting the chiefs to his control and finishing the missionary work begun under King Olaf I. He is regarded by the Norwegians as the great champion of national independence. By his harshness, his rigorous repression of every attempt to revive paganism, and by the impartial severity with which he put down piracy, he caused great discontent, which at length burst out into a general revolt. Olaf fled to Gardariki, Russia, but after two years returned with a large army and fell in the battle of Stiklestad, near Trondhjem, 29 July, 1030. He was venerated soon after his death. His shortcomings were united to a chivalrous enthusiasm for the Christian faith and were cancelled by his heroic death for Christ and country. His cult, in the Middle Ages, spread widely over the northern countries. His body reposes untouched in Trondhjem cathedral. F. in Middle Ages at Trondhjem: 29 July and Tr. rel. 3 Aug.; both feasts holydays of obligation; at present, 29 July dp. in the Northern missions.—Buch.—L. S.—Chev. 3408.—H. L.

Oliver Plunket (B.), M., Abp. of Armagh and Primate of all Ireland. B. in 1629, at Loughcrew, Meath; educated first at Dublin, then (1645 he accompanied P. Scarampi to Rome) at the Irish College (Jesuits) Rome; taught theology at the Propaganda, 1657–1669. The Irish bishops made him their procurator at the Apostolic See. June 9, 1669, Clement IX nominated him to the see of Armagh; he was consecrated at Ghent, Nov. 13, and received with enthusiasm in Ireland. In 1670, he held a national council; in 1678, a provincial synod; he defended the rights of the primatial see of Armagh against Archbp. Talbot of Dublin. Persecuted by Shaftesbury, he was a fugitive after 1674. In 1678, first Talbot, then Plunket, were arrested. Because the Irish judges refused to convict Plunket of treason, he was brought to London and there hanged and quartered by royal decree, July 11, 1681. His head was sent to Rome by Card. Howard, but brought back to Drogheda, in 1772. His body was transferred to Lamspringe in Westphalia (1684), but was brought to Downside abbey, England, in 1883. The process for his canonization was opened in Dec. 1886. Beatified, May 23, 1920. F. 11 July.—Buch.—Anal. Pont., 1921, p. 691.

Olympias, Matron; b. about 368, at Constantinople; in 384 she married Nebridius, prefect of the city of Constantinople (S. Gregory Naz. wrote a poem for their marriage feast). After her husbands' death (386), when the administration of her large fortune had been restored to her by Emp. Theodosius I (391), she gave her riches to the poor and the Church, founded a convent near the cathedral, and took the habit of a deaconess. For her steadfast adherence to S. John Chrysostom, she was exiled; S. John wrote 17 letters to her. She died at Nicomedia, 25 July, 408. Her relics were brought to her monastery at Constantinople. This convent was destroyed during a riot in 532, and rebuilt by Emp. Justinian I. F. 17 Dec. Rom. Mart. dp. at Constantinople. 25 July MGr. 12 Sept. Syr. Men.—Buch.—L. S. Chev. 3417.—F. J.

Onesima, "Daughter of Kings," venerated by the Syrians. F. 15 July, Rb. Sl.

Onesimus, the "Apostle," a slave of Philemon (Philem. VI, 9); b. of pagan parents at Colossae; fearing punishment for dishonesty or negligence (?), he escaped from his master and fled to Rome, where S. Paul converted him and conceived an affection for him, but sent him with a letter back to Philemon, who set him free and dispatched him back to Rome. He probably was consecrated Bp. of Berrhoea in Macedonia. The Spaniards claim that he preached the Gospel in Spain. The Greeks erroneously number him among the 72 disciples. The Rom. Mart. says that he was stoned at Rome and his relics were brought to Ephesus, of which city he had been ordained Bishop; v. Onesimus of Ephesus. F. 16 Feb.; dp. at Pozzuoli. In the Greek Church, 15 Febr., full office.—Buch.—L. S.—Syn., 310 (15 Feb.)

Onesimus (not the servant of Philemon, with whom he is often confounded, also by the Rom. Mart.), consecrated Bp. of Ephesus, in 97, after S. Timothy was, himself, stoned at Rome under Trajan, in 110. F. 16 Feb., Rom. Mart. dp. at Smyrna (Lat.)—Buch.—C. E.—Mgr.

Oswald, king of Northumbria, M.; b. in 604, son of King Ethelfrid, "the Ravager," of Northumbria, and nephew of S. Edwin. After his father's death, in 616, he fled to Iona (Hy), where he was baptized according to the rite of the Celtic Church. In 634, he reconquered his country from the Briton Cadwallon (battle of Heavensfield) and, with the assistance of S. Aedhan ('Aidan'), the founder of Lindisfarne, introduced Christianity, thus uniting Northumbria with the Celtic Church of the North. He fell in the battle of Maserfield, against the pagan King Penda of Mercia, 5 Aug., 642. His veneration was spread by Scottish monks over the South of Germany, where he is still a very popular saint (Church of S. Oswald, Zug). His legend was influenced by elements of German hero worship and mythology. He is one of the best known medieval saints ("gentle and strong, serious and sincere, pious and intelligent, humble and bold, active and gracious, a soldier and a missionary, a king and a martyr"; B. G.). F. end of Middle ages in all England, in southern Germany, and in several religious Orders: 5 Aug. Now in England, 7 Aug, dp., at Meissen and Treves, simpl. 5 Aug. S. Oswin, King in Northumbria, M.; grand nephew of Ella, founder of the Deirian dynasty. When a child, he fled from the Britons and spent his youth in exile in Wessex, where he was baptized. After the death of S. Oswald (642) he returned and was crowned king of Deira. He was an intimate friend of S. Aedhan of Lindisfarne. On 20 Aug., 651, he was assassinated by order of his rival, King Oswy of Bernicia, at Gilling, near Richmond, Yorkshire. In expiation of this crime King Oswy built the monastery of Gilling. During the Danish wars his relics were removed to Tynemouth, where they were elevated, 11 March, 1100. F. 20 Aug. at York, 15 Apr. at Sarum.—St., 401.—L. S.—Angl.—Moran, 243.

Oswy (B.), king of Northumbria, brother of S. Oswald, M.; he was sincerely penitent for his complicity in the murder of S. Oswin; having vanquished the fierce pagan Penda at Winwed, he made Mercia a Christian country. At Whitby he decided the Easter controversy in favor of the Roman observance. D. in 670. He has no liturgical cult, but bears the title of "saint" in ancient martyrologies, 15 Feb.—St., 69.—L. S.

Othilia = S. Odilia.

Othmar (Otmar, Audemar), first abbot of S. Gall, M. He was of Alemannic descent, educated in Rhaetia, and had been pastor of S. Florinus' church (S. Peter's at Remis). Waltram of Thurgau made him superior of the dilapidated cell of S. Gall, in 720. Othmar introduced there the rule of S. Benedict instead of the old austere rule of S. Columban, built a hospice, and probably also a school. Karlmann and Pepin made donations to the new monastery. When Othmar resisted encroachments made upon these possessions of the monastery by counts Warin and Ruodhart, he was imprisoned by them, first at Bodman, then on Werd isle, near Eschnetz, where he died, 16 Nov., 759. His body was brought to S. Gall, in 769, and buried in his own church, in 867. F. 16 Nov. dp. 1 cl. oct. (princ. patron) at S. Gall. Tr. rel. 15 Apr. dp.—Buch.—H. L.—H. D.

Otto, Bp. of Bamberg, apostle of Pomerania. B. in 1062, of the noble, though not wealthy, Mistelbach family, in middle Franconia, and educated at the court of Duke Wladislas of Poland; before 1090 he entered the service of Emp. Henry IV, who made him his chancellor (1101). He was designated Bp. of Bamberg by Henry IV and consecrated by Pope Paschal at Anagni, 13 May, 1106. Because he was neutral in the investiture quarrel, Bp. Adalbert of Mayence suspended him at the synod of Fritzlar; at the conventicle of Würzburg he zealously worked for peace, which was effected by the Concordat of Worms. Personally he led an ascetic life, gave all his time to the interests of his diocese, rebuilt the church of S. Michael, finished the cathedral, raised the standard of education, built churches and castles, and founded 20 monasteries in the dioceses of Bamberg, Würzburg, Ratisbon, Passau, Eichstädt, Halberstadt, and Aquileja. His greatest work is the evangelization of the Pommeranians; after these had promised to become Christians, Duke Boleslaw III, of Poland, sent Otto with papal powers (1124) to convert the inhabitants of Pyritz, Kammin, Stettin, and Julin; he baptized over 22,000. In 1128, after a pagan reaction, he undertook his second missionary journey; the nobles adopted the Christian faith at the diet of Usedom. He d. 30 June, 1139, at Bam-Paisis (Anba Isis) and Thecla, his s'ster. Mm. They were natives of Abusir and were martyred by order of the governor of El-Khosus, perhaps under Diocletian (or by the Arabs?). F. 4 Dec.—Eg., 96.

Paisius, M., at Caesarea; v. S. Agabius, 15 March.

* Paisius Galitzki, abbot, archimandrite of Paisi monastery, at Galitsch, gov. of Kostroma, Russia; 15th century. F. 22 May, in Russia.—Mz.

* Paisius of Uglitsch, abbot; b. at Kashin, gov. Tver, in Russia; he was a nephew of S. Macarius of Kalashin, founder and hegumenos of the Pokrowski monastery, near Uglitsch, about 1463. D. in 1504. F. 6 June —Mrt.—Mz.

Paisius the Great, abbot; b. in Egypt; he became a monk in the desert of Scete in Egypt, under S. Pambo, after whose death he founded a great monastery in the Nitrian desert; 4th century. His relics were brought to the monastery of S. Isidore Pelusiotes. F. 19 June, Mz.—Par., 108.—H. L.

* Paisius and Mercurius, monks in the Petcherskoi monastery, at Kiev, Russia. They lived together in strong brotherly love, died together, and were buried in one grave. F. 28 Aug., at Kiev, Mz.

Paisius and Isaias, Cc., brothers, sons of an Egyptian merchant who traded in Spain. Paisius gave his inheritance to the poor; Isaias built a monastery, where Paisius took the habit; 4th century.—Par., 14.

Paissant = S. Paxentius.

Palaeon, one of the earliest anchorites in the Thebaid; by his austere mode of life he attracted many disciples, amongst them the great S. Pachomius. He followed Pachomius to his monastery at Tabennisi, where he died, about 330. F. 11 Jan., Rom. Mart. dp. in the diocese of Albi. In the Coptic Church, 13 Dec. and 11 June; 12 Aug. Mz. dp. (Lat.) in Egypt 13 Feb. (from 11 Jan.) —Comm.

Palatianus (Coptic) = S. Fabian, Pope. Syn. 294 (8 Feb.).

Palatias, V., M. B. probably at Ancona and instructed in the faith by her slave, S. Laurentia; she was exiled to Fermo, where both fell victims to the fury of the persecution under Diocletian. Her relics are in the cathedral of Ancona; in the 16th century, a church was built in her honor at Ancona, another at Osimo. F. 8 Oct., Rom. Mart.; at Ancona, dp. 2 cl. (minor patron), dp. at Fermo and Osimo. She is princ. patron of Agnano, diocese of Camerino.—Off. pr.—H. L.

Palatinus, M., perhaps one of the courtiers of Diocletian, who were racked and thrown into the sea at Nicomedia, in 303. He has been joined to a number of heterogeneous martyrs by the Hier. Mart., 4 March and 24 Feb. (30 May).—Ach., 126.

Palatinus, M., at Thessalonica; v. S. Fronto, 14 March.

Palatinus, M., at Thessalonica; v. S. Dominius, 30 March.

Palatinus, M., at Antioch. F. 30 May, Hier. Mart.—Ach. 127, 144.

Palatus, M., at Antioch; v. S. Victor, 5 March.

Paldo, Taso, and Tato, Cc., brothers, O. S. B., natives of Benevento. P. B., 6 May, says, that they assisted S. Petronax to rebuild the abbey of Monte Cassino, ruined by the Lombards. H. L. identifies him with S. Paldo of S. Vincenzo on the Volturno and claims that Tato and Taso helped their brother to build the monastery of St. Vincent. Pado d. 11 Oct., 720, in the monastery of S. Vincenzo, at the headwaters of the River Voltorno. F. 11 Oct.—H. L.—P. B. (11 Jan.)

Palladius, Bp. of Auxerre, about 622–658; he had been abbot of S. Germain and founded several churches and monasteries; d. 10 Apr., 658; canonized, 30 July, 945. F. 10 Apr. dp. at Sens.—P. B.—Mg.

Palladius I, Bp. of Bourges; d. in 384 and is buried at S. Pallais near Bourges. F. 10 May; at Bourges, 11 May dp.—P. B.—Mg.

Palladius II, Bp. of Bourges; he founded the church of S. Stephen at Bourges; d. in 460. His relics are at Marsillac, diocese of Cahors. F. 10 May.—P. B.—Mg.

Palladius, a priest, Cotylas, a priest, Adramas (Ardama), Moyses, Isaias, and Paliconus (Baniklas), Mm., ascetes at Tuna monastery in Egypt; they were taken to Alexandria and killed by various tortures, perhaps under Diocletian. F. 23 June.—Cal. Copt.

Palladius, Bp., C., the first bishop sent by Pope Celestine to Ireland; he was probably a descendant of a Gallo-Roman family and was ordained deacon of the Church of Rome; at his instance Pope Celestine sent S. German of Auxerre to Britain to root out the Pelagian heresy. In 431 (430?), he was consecrated bishop of the Scots "believing in Christ," and sent to preach the Gospel in Ireland. He landed in the territory of the Hy Garchon, where the town of Wicklow now stands. In spite of opposition, he founded three churches: Teachna Roman in Tigroney (parish of Castle McAdam, Co. Wicklow), Kill-Fine, in the parish of Glendalough and Domnach-Ardec in the barony of Lower Talbotstown, Co. Wicklow. His mission was almost a failure; he left Ireland, crossed over to Scotland, and died there the following year, 15 Dec., 432. He was buried at Fordun near Aberdeen. His apostolate of 23 years in Scotland is mythical. A theory has found favor in recent times to the effect that Bp. Palladius is identical with the great S. Patrick. There can now hardly be any doubt but that S. Patrick McCalpurn and S. Palladius are not identical; some incidents in the career of S. Palladius have been appropriated by the legend of S. Patrick. F. in the Aberdeen Brev., 6 July.—C. E.—Ftpr. 186.—L. S.

Palladius, M., in Syria; v. S. Zoticus, 6 July.

Palladius (Pallais), C., Bp. of Saintes, France. His father, Palladius, was count of Gevaudan; he was elected bishop of Saintes. in 570; as such he was present at the synod of Paris, in 573. In 579, he held a synod at Saintes, where he excommunicated Count Nantinus of Angoulême; he labored under grievous dissension with King Guntram, because he had favored the pretender Gundobald. His sanctity is disputed, not without reason; he built a church in honor of S. Martin, and other churches, and elevated the relics of S. Eutropius. D. towards the end of the 6th century. His cult originated in the 10th century. F. 6 Sept. dp. at La Rochelle and Angoulême (7 Oct., Gall. Mart.)

—P. B.—Mg.

Palladius, a monk; he was b. at Salonica and lived at Alexandria in the 6th century. F. 27 Nov., MGr.

Palladius, "the Solitary"; 29 Nov. in the Syr. Men.—Rb. Sl.

Palmatius and 42 companions, Mm. Palmatius was a Roman judge, who sentenced S. Calepodius to death; converted and baptized by S. Callistus with his whole household, he was beheaded, in May, 222. F. 10 May, Rom. Mart.—Comm.

Palmatius, alleged Roman proconsul at Treves, and a number of senators and influential citizens of Treves (known names: Justinus, Hormisdas, Papyrius, Alexander, Constans, Soter, and Jovinianus), Mm., executed by order of Rictiovarus c. 287. These martyrs are apocryphal and were unknown at Treves before the 11th century. The legend originated when a Roman cemetery was discovered about the church of S. Paulinus in 1071. F. of S. Palmatius, 5 Oct., Rom. Mart. dp. at Treves; of other innumerable Mm., 6 Oct., Rom. Mart. dp. at Treves. The relics of S. Palmatius are in Karlstein castle, Bohemia.—H. L.—Off. pr.—H. D.

Pambo, M., in Egypt; v. S. Hyperechius, 5 June.

Pambo (Panbis), C., abbot in the Nitrian Desert, a disciple of S. Antony, one of the great teachers of the desert; he especially practiced silence; he suffered martyrdom for the faith at Alexandria. Among the many who had recourse to him for spiritual counsel were S. Melania and the great S. Athanasius. D. in the presence of S. Melania, in 393. F. 27 Aug., Rom. Mart.; 18 July, Mgr.—Par., 103.—P. B. (1 July)

* Pambo, the Recluse, C., a monk at Kiev, Russia; in 1214 he was tormented by the Tatars; d. in peace. F. 28 Aug. with that of many other monks of the Petsherskoi monastery.—Mrt.—Mz.

Pamin (Poemen), M., (without effusion of blood), in Egypt, b. in Oshmunin, Egypt, he was manager of an estate for a rich man, but left the world and became a monk in a monastery near Ansina; during the persecution of Diocletian he suffered long torture and imprisonment. Set free under Constantine, he died in peace in his monastery. The Copts ascribe many miracles to him. F. 5 Dec. Copt. Cal.—Syn., 165.—Eg., 97.—v. S. Poemen, 5 Dec.

Pammachius, C., a Roman senator; b. about 340, of the Roman house of the Furii; in 370, he was proconsul; a man well-bred in worldly and theological sciences, friend and schoolmate of S. Jerome, with whom he remained in regular correspondence. When his wife Paulina (2d daughter of S. Paula) died, in 395, he received letters of condolence from S. Jerome and S. Paulinus of Nola. He took a monk's habit and holy Orders, used his rich possessions for the sick and poor, and built a hospice at Porto Romano, where he served the sick with his own hands. His house is the present church of Ss. John and Paul (titulus Pammachii), where his relics rest. D. in 410. His translations of Origen's work are of considerable value. F. 30 Aug., Rom. Mart., dp. in Ss. Giovanni e Paolo and by the Hieronymites. H. L.—W.W.

Pamphilus, M., at Alexandria; v. S. Julian, 12 Feb.

Pamphilus, priest, M., at Caesarea in Palestine. B. at Berytus, in Phoenicia; he was educated at Alexandria under Pierius, a disciple of Origen; he settled at Caesarea, where he was ordained priest and governed a school. D. in 309, after several years' imprisonment and many tortures, a victim of the persecution under Maximin. He was a strong partisan of Origen, of whose library he made a catalogue; even in prison he wrote an apology of Origen, assisted by his disciple Eusebius (Pamphili). The latter's "Life of Pamphilus" is lost. F. 1 June, Rom. Mart.; in the Greek Church 15 Feb., full office; in the Coptic Church, 16 May; at Jerusalem (Lat.), 1 June dp.—Comm.—H. L.

Pamphilus, M., at Nicomedia; v. S. Eugeenius, 17 March.

Pamphilus, C., Bp. of Sulmona. B. at Sulmo, elected bishop of Sulmo and Corfinium; accused of Arian practices before Pope Sergius, he splendidly vindicated himself. D. 28 Apr., about 700, at Corfinium Sulmona. F. 28 Apr. dp. 1 cl. oct. (princ. patron of cities and diocese of Sulmona and Valva). F. of his Patronage, 14 Jan. dp. maj.—H. L.—Off. pr.

Pancratius, M., at Alexandria; v. S. Didymus, 5 Apr.

Pancratius (Paneras), M., one of the 14 Holy Helpers; a celebrated Roman M. under Diocletian (304?) or under Valerius and Gallienus. According to an unreliable legend he was born in Phrygia, came to Rome with his uncle Dionysius, and was beheaded on the Via Aurelia, only 14 years old. Pope Symmachus, about 500, built a basilica over his tomb, where S. Gregory delivered his 27th homily; since 1517 it is a cardinalial church. His tomb is a celebrated shrine. Pancratius was considered the avenger of perjurers. The first church at Canterbury was dedicated to S. Pancras by S. Augustine. A present sent by Pope S. Vitalian, in the 7th century, of part of his relics to one of the Anglo-Saxon kings led to the dedication of many churches to him in England and great popular devotion in his honor. His relics in his own church at Rome were destroyed, in 1798. His head is in the Lateran Basilica. F. 12 May, Rom. Mart., sem. in the entire Latin Church. He is the princ. patron of the diocese of Albano, dp. 1 cl. oct. dp. in the Lateran; at Tricarico, minor patron, 2 cl. Tr. rel. 20 Oct.—Passions, 380.—Unt. Rom., 325.—L. S.—W.W.

Pantaleon, M., at Bisceglie; v. S. Maurus, 27 July.

Pantaleon (Panteleemon), M., one of the 14 Holy Helpers; his Greek name is "Panteleemon," that is, the all-compassionate. According to a legend he was the physician of Emp. Maximian at Nicomedia; during the persecution of Diocletian he was reported by envious colleagues; after various tortures he was tied to an olive tree and beheaded, about 305. From his head flowed milk and an olive tree covered itself with fruit. His "acts" are worthless, but the fact of his martyrdom is made certain by his ancient veneration in the Orient, where he is called "Thaumaturgus," and "Megalomartyr." He is patron of physicians and midwives, also invoked against consumption. F. Rom. Mart. 27 June, simpl. in the Latin Church; in the Greek and Syrian Churches, full office; his blood, which becomes liquid at times, is venerated at Ravello, diocese of Amalfi, and at Madrid, Spain. He is princ. patron of Ravello; 3rd Sunday in May, Tr. of his Blood, dp. 2 cl. He is also princ. patron of the dioceses of Capaccio and Valle in Italy and of Oporto in Portugal; 12 Dec. Tr. rel. (in 1499), dp. 2 cl. At Crema in Lombardy (princ. patron), F. of his Patronage 10 June dp. 2 cl. He is also princ. patron of the Piarists. At Montorio, diocese of Squillace, 5 Feb. Pantaleon and his brothers, Mm., venerated by the Copts, 10 Oct., Cal. Copt.

Pantaleon Asja, i. e., "the Physician" = S. Asja, 15 Oct.

Pantalus, Bp., M. According to the legend, he was Bp. of Augusta Rauracorum (Basle), and attached himself as guide and protector to S. Ursula and her virgins on their pilgrimage to Rome, accompanied them to Cologne, and suffered martyrdom there. This part of the legend originated in the 12th century, from the "revelations" made to S. Elizabeth of Schoenau, after a sepulchral tablet with the inscription "Pantalus" had been found, in 1157. His alleged head was brought to Basle, in 1272; it is now at Mariastein (since 1833); this head may be that of a martyr, but Bp. Pantalus is not a historical character. Paphnutius, reputed Bp. of Sais, in Lower Egypt, exiled under Constantius. F. 21 May, Cal. Copt.

Paphnutius, M., in Egypt. F. 21 June.—Eg., 83.

Paphnutius, "the Buffalo," an anchorite and priest in the Lower Thebaid in Egypt; b. in 305; Cassian visited him in 395. He never left his cell save to attend mass on Saturdays and Sundays, five miles away. When the Patriarch Theophilus of Alexandria condemned Anthropomorphism in his paschal letter of 399, Paphnutius was the only monastic ruler in the Egyptian desert who caused the document to be read. F. 20 July, Cal. Copt.—H. L.

Paphnutius, C., the father of S. Euphrosyne-Smaragdus; his name and existence stand and fall with the story of the "woman-monk." F. 25 Sept., Mrt.—Eg., 83.

Paphnutius and 546 companions, Mm. Paphnutius was a hermit in the Thebaid in upper Egypt; filled with zeal he delivered himself up to the prefect to be imprisoned with the incarcerated Christians; he was so successful in the dungeon that many of the wavering were confirmed in their faith. All were beheaded after the usual tortures, with their guide Paphnutius, about 303, at Tentyra in Egypt. Paphnutius was nailed to a date tree. F. 24 Sept., Rom. Mart., 25 Sept., MGr.; 22 Sept., Copt. Cal.—H. L.—Eg., 1341 103.

Paphnutius, the Great, Bp., C., in the Upper Thebaid, a strenuous opponent of the Arian heresy. He suffered torture (one eye plucked out and one leg hamstrung) under Maximinus Thrax; after 311, he attached himself to S. Antony; he was constituted Bp. of some see in the Thebaid and as such was highly respected by Emp. Constantine. He is said by his influence to have carried a resolution at the Nicene Council (325), that priests should be forbidden to marry only after ordination. In modern times his name has been often abused as that of an adversary of celibacy. At the synod of Tyre (335), he defended S. Athanasius. D. about 356. F. 11 Sept., Rom. Mart.; in the Coptic Church, 9 Feb. and 1 May.—Syn., 302.—W.W.

Paphnutius and companions, Martyrs in Egypt under Diocletian. The Greeks have long and detailed accounts of their sufferings, but they are far from being trustworthy and are of late date. 4th century. F. 24 Sept. Rams.

Paphnutius, abbot and founder of a monastery near Heracleopolis Magna in the Thebaid. He is said to have converted the harlot Thais at Alexandria; d. about 380. F. 29 Nov., Cal Copt.—H. L.—P. B. (3 March).

Papias and Maurus (Mauroleon), Mm., Roman soldiers, who, according to their unreliable "acts," were converted during the martyrdom of Ss. Saturninus and Sisinnius; they were killed with leaden clubs, under Diocletian (304), and buried in the Ostrian cemetery on the Via Nomentana, 29 Jan.; Sergius II transferred their bodies to S. Silvestro, Gregory IX to S. Adriano, and Sixtus V (1590) to S. Maria in Vallicella (11 Feb.). F. 29 Jan., Rom. Mart.; dp. 1 cl., in S. Maria in Vallicella (Chiesa Nuova) at Rome. Tr. rel. 11 Feb.—H. L.—Off. pr.

Papias, Diodorus, and Claudianus, Mm., brothers and shepherds at Attileia in Pamphylia; they were beheaded at Perge, under Decius, in 251. F. 3 Feb., MGr. The Rom. Mart. adds to these three: Ss. Victorinus, Victor, Nicephorus, and Serapion, 25 Feb.—Comm.

Papias, C., Bp. of Hierapolis, in the valley of the Lycus in Phrygia, a contemporary of S. Polycarp. He wrote a (now lost) work entitled "The Interpretation of Our Lord's Declaration," in 5 books, containing various parables not found in the Gospels. Eusebius accuses him of having inserted in his work much that is fabulous; he is said to have entertained Chilistic views (a Thousand Years, Earthly Kingdom of Christ), but modern research has freed him of this charge. Of his life nothing is known. 2nd century. F. 22 Feb., Rom. Mart.; 25 Feb. at Smyrna.—W.W.—C. E.—Comm.

Paschalis I, C., Pope, 25 Jan. 817-824. He was a native of Rome, educated at the Lateran school and elected abbot (O. S. B.) at S. Stephen's, near the Vatican, where he took care of the pilgrims. After his elevation to the chair of S. Peter, he renewed the friendly alliance (Pactum confirmationis) with Emperor Louis and, in 823, crowned Lothar, the son of Louis. When, soon afterwards, two papal officers, partisans of the Franks, were killed, Paschalis purified himself by an oath of all guilt of complicity before the ambassador of Louis. He empowered Ebbo (Archbp. of Reims), the forerunner of S. Anscar, to evangelize Denmark and protected the Oriental Catholics, who were persecuted by the Iconoclast Emperor, Leo V. He restored a number of Roman churches and transferred the bodies of many martyrs to S. Peter's and S. Prassede; he also found and transferred the relics of S. Cecilia. He died in the spring of 824. F. 14 May, Rom. Mart., dp. at Rome.—W.W.—C. E.—P. B.—Biogr.

Paschalis Baylon, C., lay brother O. F. M.; b. 16 May (Pentecost), 1540, at Torrehermosa in Aragon; he was christened after his birthday (Pascua de Pentecoste). After having been a shepherd for some years, he took the habit of S. Francis (strict observance) at N. S. de Loreto, Monforte, in 1564. With the exception of a journey which he made through France, in 1570, he spent his life, mostly as doorkeeper, in different Spanish convents. He was amiable, humble, filled with the spirit of penance and animated by a glowing love for the Holy Eucharist. D. 17 May, 1592, at Villareal, near Valencia. Beatified in 1618, canonized in 1690. Leo XIII, in 1897, declared him patron of Eucharistic associations and congresses. His relics were elevated in the Franciscan church at Valencia, 11 Dec., 1676. F. 19 May, Rom. Mart.; in the entire Latin Church (since 1784) dp.; dp. 2 cl. O. F. M. (Tr. rel. 27 Apr.) and at Valencia; dp. maj. (min. patron) at Naples. He is princ. patron of Brugnato, Italy.—W. W.—P. B.—L. Patermuthius (Petarpemotis), Copres, and Alexander, Mm. Patermuthius, an Egyptian hermit, at the age of 75 years, and his disciple, the monk Copres (Copri), according to their "acts," were brought before Julian the Apostate; Copri weakened during torture, but repented when he saw the tears of his abbot; they were thrown into a furnace with Alexander, a converted soldier. The acts of these saints are fictitious. Patermuthius was a notorious robber, converted by S. Copres, 4th century; all the rest is a romance. Julian never was in Egypt after he had become Emperor. F. 9 July, Rom. Mart. (Baronius admitted these apocryphal saints); 17 Dec., MGr. A little church was dedicated to them at Rome, which now is united to S. M. in Vallicella, wherefore their F. is celebrated in the Chiesa Nuova, sem., 17 Dec.—Mrt.—Mz.—Eg., 90.

Patrick (Padrig) ab Alfryd, C.; he lived in the time of S. Elfod, Bp. of Caergybi (Holyhead, Anglesey), was a monk of S. Cybi's choir and of S. Beuno's at Clynnog; he founded Llanbadrig on the northern coast of Anglesey; 6th century. Because he has been confounded with the Apostle of Ireland, his F. is kept on 17 March.—B. G., IV, 52.

Patrick (Padrig, Patricius) McCalpurn, Bp., C., the great Apostle of Ireland. He is a clearly defined historical personage, but the exact time and extent of his activity is difficult to determine. The commonly accepted chronology of his life is the following (C. E., XI, 554 ss.): He was born at Dumbarton (Kilpatrick), Scotland, in 383, a son of the Celto-Roman deacon and decurion Calpurnius; his vernacular name was Sucat, his Latin name, Patricius. In his sixteenth year he was carried off into captivity by Irish marauders and was sold to a chieftain named Milchu McCuboin in Dalaradia (Antrim). His captivity brought about his perfect conversion and gave him a good knowledge of the Irish tongue and the Celtic people. Having spent six years in captivity, he escaped and returned to Britain. From there he went to Gaul and was educated at Tours, Lérins, and Auxerre. He attached himself to S. Germain of Auxerre and accompanied him to Britain (429). At that time there must have been a considerable number of Christians in Ireland; for, in 430, Palladius, a bishop and native of Britain, was sent by Pope Celestine "to the Scots, believing in Christ." The Irish venerate quite a number of saints, as "Pre-Patrician" missionaries. Palladius, however, did little and almost immediately returned to Britain. Recommended to Pope Celestine I by S. Germain, after the failure of the mission of S. Palladius had become known, Patrick McCalpurn was commissioned to go to Ireland by Celestine, a few days before the latter's death (432), and was consecrated at Turin by S. Maximus (or by Pope Celestine?). Repulsed by the Druids, near Wicklow Head, he proceeded to Dalaradia, where he founded the first church at Sabhall (Saul), in the barn of one Dichu, his first convert. Easter, 433, he received permission to preach from King Leoghaire (shamrock: symbol of the Bl. Trinity) and converted Conall, the king's brother, and the hard Dubhtach. In July he destroyed the idol Crom Cruach. He spent seven years in evangelizing Connaught (Rathcroghan being the royal seat); in 440, he undertook the conversion of Ulster and founded Armagh; then he proceeded to Leinster, and from there to Munster, where he baptized Aengus, the son of King Nadfraich. Up to his death he visited the churches, consecrating some 350 bishops. When not engaged in the sacred ministry, he spent his time in prayer and works of the most severe mortification. During Lent he went up to Croagh Patrick, the Mount Sina of Ireland, wrestling with the Most High for his beloved people. His apostolate was no "unbroken series of peaceful triumphs"; he tells us in his Confession that he and his companions were imprisoned seven times and his life was imperiled more than once. He d. at Saul, 17 March, 493, and was interred at the chieftain's Dun, or Fort, where, in after times, rose the Cathedral of Down. Although some, especially British, Christians were scattered over the Southwest of Ireland before the coming of S. Patrick, it cannot be disputed that he converted pagan Ireland and closely united the Irish Church with Rome. The luxurious wreath of legends which surround his "Life," proves the lasting impression of his personality and the importance of his apostolic work, viz., the legend of the Christian Easter fire on Slane Hill (Tara), his struggle with the national Druids, the chasing of the serpents from the island by means of a staff given to him by Christ (kept in Dublin Cathedral up to 1538), his vision of Purgatory in a wild cave on an island in Lough Derg (this legend was eliminated from the Breviary by Clement VII in 1524, after Alexander VI, about 1497, had commanded the cave to be closed). According to Professor Bury (Life of S. Patrick, 1905), S. Patrick was born in 389, was taken prisoner in 405, went to Lérins in 412, to Auxerre in 415 (Bishop Amator d. in 418), and remained with S. Germain till 432, when the latter consecrated him and sent him directly to Ireland; he left Ireland and visited Rome about 442, when Leo I was Pope; he founded Armagh in 444 and died in 461. Baring-Gould (Lives of the British Saints, IV, 54 ss.) distinguishes five Patricks: (1) S. Patrick-Palladius, sent by Pope Celestine; (2) S. Patrick McMavon, b. in Wales; (3) S. Patrick McCalpurn, the Apostle of Ireland; (4) S. Patrick McSannan, a nephew of the Apostle and (5) S. Patrick McAlfryd of Anglesey. He shows how these five Patricks have been fused into one. According to him the Apostle of Ireland (S. Patrick McCalpurn) was born at Bennaventa (Davenetry), on the Lower Severn, about 409; after his escape from captivity he probably followed his father, who fled from the Picts to Brittany (Armorica). Baring-Gould holds it highly improbable that S. Patrick McCalpurn ever got as far as Lérins, or that he was connected with S. Germain of Auxerre, or that he was sent to Ireland by Pope Celestine I. A number of years after the failure of Palladius (432), Patrick proceeded to his mission in Ulster (about 455); he did not visit Leo I, nor could he have founded Armagh as early as 444. He d. 17 March, 493. It seems that he established a school of missionaries for the Irish Church at Ty Gwyn, Wales, under Maucan or Ninio. The mission by Celestine I was adapted from Palladius-Patrick, also the repulsion by the Druids and chiefs at Wicklow. The story of his connection with S. Germain of Auxerre, Martin of Tours, and Lérins, was taken from the life of Sen-Patrick, i. e., S. Patrick McMawon (Magonius). The shamrock is worn on St. Patrick's day because, when the Saint preached the Gospel to the pagan Irish, he illustrated the doctrine of the Trinity by showing them a trefoil, or three-leaved grass with one stalk. (Bra.) F. 17 March, Rom. Mart., dp. in the Latin Church; dp. 1 cl. (princ. patron) in all Ireland. He is patron of many cathedrals and churches in Ireland, the United States, and Australasia.—Ins., 43.—C. E.—W.W.—L. S.—B. G., IV, 54.—Chev.

Patrick McSannan, Bp., C.; he was a nephew of S. Patrick McCalpurn, the Apostle of Ireland; his father, Sannan, was said to have been a brother of S. Patrick. He was b. in Armorica (Bretagne) and was a disciple of S. German of Man. When S. Patrick went to Britain, to win missionaries, German transferred his pupil to him. S. Patrick sent his nephew to S. Loman to be trained; McSannan spent some time on the isle of Tamar, off the mouth of the Tamar River, in Cornwall; he labored together with the Apostle of Ireland, and, after the latter's death, returned to Britain. F. 17 March.—B. G., IV, 54 ss.

Paul of the Cross (Paolo Francesco Danei),

C., founder of the Passionists, one of the most illustrious saints of his age. B. at Ovada, Piedmont, 3 May, 1694; from his earliest years the crucifix was his prayer book; with some companions he commenced monastic life on Mt. Argentaro, near Orbittello; the bishop of Alessandria gave them the black habit of the Passion, 22 Nov., 1720, at Castellazzo in Lombardy. With his brother John, who was his constant companion, Paul was ordained priest in the Vatican Basilica, 7 June, 1727. He established the first retreat of his institute on Mt. Argentaro, where the first general chapter was held, 10 Apr., 1747. Benedict XIV approved the rule, 15 May, 1741, and Clement XIV gave him the church of Ss. John and Paul on Monte Celio, Rome. Paul was untiring in his apostolic labors and never, even to his last hour, gave up his austere manner of life. D. in Rome, 18 Oct., 1775. His relics are in a side chapel of Ss. Giovanni e Paolo. Paul I, M., Bp. of Constantinople; b. at Thessalonica, in 313; he was elected, in 336, to succeed Alexander in the see of Constantinople; but was exiled shortly after his election to Pontus by Emp. Constantine, who was influenced by the Eusebians. After Constantine's death (338) Paul returned, but an Arian synod condemned him and transferred him from Nicomedia to Constantinople. Paul retired to Treves and assisted at the Roman synod which restored Athanasius. After the death of Eusebius the Catholic party reelected Paul, but Constantius sent him in chains to Mesopotamia, in 342. In 344, Emp. Constans demanded his restoration; in 347 Paul was present at the synod of Sardica. When Constans died (in 350), Paul was again exiled and sent to die at Cucusus in Armenia. A report says that he was locked up for six days without food, and ultimately strangled, in 350. His body was transferred to Ancyra, from there (7 June, 391) to Constantinople, and in the 13th century to Venice (San Lorenzo). F. 7 June, Rom. Paul, "the Physician," a native of Corinth; 7th century. F. 28 June, Mz.

Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles. B. at Tarsus in Cilicia, of a Pharisee family, of the tribe of Benjamin. His Jewish name was Saul. As he was a Roman citizen, he may have borne the Greek name "Paul" from his infancy, not on account of the conversion of Sergius Paulus, but because he was in contact with the Roman world. He was b. about A.D. 3. Introduced into the Rabbinic knowledge by Gamaliel at Jerusalem, he acquired a good Hebrew education. Aramaic was his mother tongue, but he spoke Greek well. According to the custom of the rabbis he had learned a trade (tentmaker), but remained unmarried. Being a strict Pharisee, he persecuted the young Christian Church with great fanaticism, but was converted on the way to Damascus by an apparition of the Risen Saviour. With this conversion was connected his mission to evangelize the Gentiles, which was made perfect later on by divine guidance and revelation and acknowledged by the original Apostles. His sojourn of three years in Damascus was interrupted by a journey to Arabia. Persecuted by the Jews, he secretly fled from Damascus to Jerusalem, where he saw Peter and James. From there he returned to Tarsus, where he remained six years (37-43), until Barnabas introduced him to the flourishing Church of Antioch. From Antioch he undertook his three famous missionary journeys, first with Barnabas and Mark, then with Titus, Timothy, Silas, and others. In a restless activity of 13 years (46-59), harassed by Jewish persecutors, but strengthened by special divine guidance, he carried the Gospel to Cyprus, Pamphylia, Pisidia, Lycaonia, Galatia, Phrygia, Mysia, Macedonia, Illyria, and Greece, directing his eyes at last to Rome and Spain. Being an able organizer, he selected the great cities, the centres of trade and culture from which the Gospel could easily be spread to the surrounding country. Wherever possible, he first addressed the Jews and only when rejected by these, founded congregations of Gentiles, to which he gave special superiors. The accepted chronology of St. Paul's life is the following: First journey, 45-49; Council of the Apostles at Jerusalem, 50; second journey, 51-54; third journey, 54-58. In 59, the Jews in Jerusalem rose in revolt against him, and he was arrested and imprisoned for two years by the procurator Felix at Caesarea. The latter's successor, Festus, sent him to Rome, where, after an eventful and dangerous voyage, he arrived in spring, 62. According to some of the Fathers (Eusebius) he was set free in 64, but, after a missionary journey to Spain, was again imprisoned at Rome, and beheaded on the road to Ostia, 29 June, 66. (67?), two years after S. Peter (?). His body is in the Basilica of S. Paolo fuori le Mura; his head, if genuine, in the Lateran church. Kellner (Jesus von Nazaret) introduces a new chronology; he assigns the first journey of S. Paul to 36 and 37, the Council of the Apostles to 37; the second journey to 39-42; the third journey to 47-52; Paul's arrival in Rome to the spring of 55, a few months before the death of S. Peter, and his own death to 29 June, 57. The chronology of the Acts of the Apostles is uncertain, but Kellner's calculations have been declined by historians. S. Paul is patron against poisonous snakes, and of tentmakers and saddlers. F. of Ss. Peter and Paul, 29 June in the Universal Church, with solemn office. Paul, M.; v. S. Marcus, 3 July.

Paul, a boy M. During the trial of Ss. Mark and Mucianus (Mocius) he persisted in crying out in court that he, too, was a Christian. The judge at first contented himself with ordering the child to be whipped. But when the brave boy persisted in exclaiming against idols and idolaters, the judge, losing patience with him, ordered him to be handed over to the executioners, together with another amongst those present who kept crying shame on the proceedings. No clue to the date or place of this martyrdom has so far been discovered. F. July 3.—Rams., 182.

Paul I, Pope, 757-767. He was a brother of Stephen II. They had been educated for the priesthood at the Lateran school. Paul was appointed archpriest of S. Crisogono. During the later years of Stephen's pontificate a strong faction in Rome had designated his brother as his successor. Another party favored the Archdeacon Theophylact. After the death of Stephen (26 Apr., 757), Paul was elected and received episcopal consecration on 29 May. He followed his brother's policy towards the Frankish King Pepin and thereby continued the papal supremacy (temporal rule) over Rome and the districts of southern Italy, in opposition to the Lombards and the Eastern Empire. He was a mild and peace-loving pontiff, ever ready to forgive injuries, and full of sympathy with the afflicted. He received at Rome the monks who were expelled from the Orient by the Iconoclasts. He transferred to a chapel in S. Peter's from the catacomb of S. Domitilla the relics of S. Petronilla, who became the special patroness of the Frankish rulers. After a reign of a year and a month, he died of the excessive summer heat, in the church of S. Paul at Rome, 28 June, 767. F. 28 June, Rom. Mart.; at Rome, 4 July dp.—C. E.—W.W.—Biogr.

Paul, "the New Martyr." He refused to trample on the images of Christ and His Mother, for which refusal lighted pitch and sulphur were poured over his head, and he was blinded and dragged through the streets of Constantinople until dead, under Constantine Copronymus, A.D. 766. Valentina and the other woman, whom the Greek Menaea call "Thea," were burned at the stake. Paul (who was not their brother) was beheaded;—all three died on the same day, 25 July, 308. Before laying his head on the block, St. Paul obtained a few minute's respite for prayer, and interceded, first for his fellow countrymen, then for the spread of the Christian religion among both Jews and Gentiles, next for the crowd gathered to see him die, and lastly for his judge and the executioner. This is the account given by Eusebius, a contemporary of these holy martyrs. F. 25 July, Rom. Mart.; 18 July, MGr.; 16 July, Mz.—Achel., 158.—Ruin.—P. B. (25 July)—Rams.—Eg., 81.

relics are in the church of Ss. John and Cordula at Cologne. F. 2 Dec.—Gel.

Paulina, M., at Rome; v. S. Donata, 31 Dec. F. dp. in the cathedral of Plazencia.

Paulina (B.), Matron, foundress of Paulinzelle, in Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt, Germany. She was the daughter of the Imperial Lord High Steward Moricho; after the death of her husband, Ulric, she retired from the world and, with her son, Werner, founded the double monastery of Zell (Paulinzelle). D. on a journey to Hirsau at Münster-Schwarzach, 14 Feb., 1107. F. 14 Feb.—H. L.—F. J.

Paulinianus, M., a soldier at Salona in Dalmatia, a companion of Bp. S. Domnio; his body is in the chapel of S. Venanzio, Lateran, Rome. 11 Apr.—H. L.

Paulinus II, Patriarch of Aquileja. B. about 725, at Premariaco, near Cividale, and educated in the patriarchal school. He was a celebrated grammarian. After the destruction of the Lombard kingdom (774) he was called to the court of Charlemagne, where he became a friend of Alcuin and other learned men. In 787, he was elected patriarch of Aquileja, and, as such, combated Adoptionism at the synods of Ratisbon (792) and Frankfort (794); also by his three books against Bp. Felix of Urgel. He defended the "Filioque" at the synod of Friuli (796) and showed himself active for the conversion of the Avars. He composed a number of hymns for the use of the Church of Aquileja. He had acquired a thorough Latin culture, also an extensive knowledge of jurisprudence and an excellent Scriptural and patristic training. D. 11 Jan., 802. His relics are in the Friuli cathedral, now at Cividale. F. at Udine, 9 Feb. dp. (formerly at Aquileja, 11 Jan.); his name is not in the Roman Mart.—Comm.—C. E.—W.W.—Buch.—Rams.

Paulinus, C., Bp. of Brescia, about 524-545. His relics are in the church of S. Pietro in Oliveto, since 1490. F. 4 March dp. at Brescia, Italy (Rom. Mart., 29 Apr.)—H. L.

Paulinus, deacon, M., whose relics are venerated in the church of S. Cecilia, Cologne. Some claim that he was deacon to S. Maternus, Bp. of Cologne; others say that he was a nobleman at the court of Emp. Constantine Copronymus, left the world, took a deacon's orders, and for defending the orthodox faith was killed with a heavy hammer, in 750. His relics were brought to Venice, and from there to Cologne. F. 4 May, at S. Cecilia, Cologne.—Gel., 360.

Paulinus, C., Bp. and principal patron of Sinigaglia; d. in 826. F. 4 May dp. 1 cl. oct. (anniversary of his election to the patronage of the city). Nothing is known of his life.—Off. pr.—P. B.

Paulinus, C., an apocryphal Bp. of Badajoz, Spain. His feast (22 June) was struck from the calendar of Badajoz in 1820.—Arch.

Paulinus (Pontius Meropius Anicius Paulinus), C. Bp. of Nola, one of the most cultured men of his time, ecclesiastical writer and Christian poet. B. about 353, at Embray, near Bordeaux. His father was pretorian prefect in Gaul. Paulinus studied with the poet Ausonius, and under his direction became accomplished as an orator and a poet. Valentinian the Elder appointed him prefect of Rome. On a visit to Nola he was struck with certain miracles which he saw performed at the tomb of S. Felix and resolved to lead a Christian life, but it was not until fifteen years after (about 385), that he was baptized by S. Delphinus, Bp. of Bordeaux. He was a friend of S. Martin of Tours, S. Ambrose of Milan, and S. Victorius of Rouen. After the early death of his only child, he withdrew from the world, went to Spain (390), and gave the Spanish possessions of his wife Tarsicia to the poor. In 394, the people of Barcelona compelled him to accept the priesthood. In 395, he betook himself to Milan. After the death of S. Ambrose he went to Rome, and, at last, retired to Nola, to the hospice which he had founded and, in spite of the remonstrances of his friends, lived there like a hermit. He continued his liberality, building an aqueduct for Nola, a basilica at Fondi, another at Nola, etc. About 410 he was chosen by the people Bp. of Nola. He was the protecting and consoling angel of Campania during the invasion of the Goths under Alaric. After 395, he annually composed a long poem for the feast of S. Felix. D. 22 June, 431, at Nola. During the Lombard reign his body was brought to Benevento, from there, under Otto III, to S. Bartolomeo all' Isola, Rome; but, by a decree of Pius X it was restored to Nola. F. simpl. in the Latin Church, 22 June; since 1909 dp.; at Nola, dp. 2 cl. Tr. rel. 15 May dp. maj.; in the Russian Church, 23 Jan. It was not this Paulinus, but Paulinus III, Bp. of Nola, who gave himself up to the Vandals, as a slave in the place of a widow's son.—C. E.—W.W.—Buch.—P. B.—Dand., VI, 144.

Paulinus, a Roman M., whose relics were found in the cemetery of S. Cyriaca, in 1655, and transferred to Mauriac, Auvergne. F. 2nd Sunday in July.—H. L.

Paulinus, Bp., C., an apocryphal saint, said to have been b. at Antioch and sent to Lucca by S. Peter. He is venerated at Lucca as the first bishop of that city and its principal protector. F. 12 July dp. 1 cl. oct. According to a legend at Lucca, he suffered martyrdom near Pisa, with the priest Severus, the deacon Lucas, and the soldier Theobald. Perhaps he is identical with the Bp. Paulinus of Lucca who was present at the synod of Rimini, in 359. The current story is a romance of the 13th century, which rests on no foundation except the fact that a sarcophagus bearing the names of Paulinus, Lucas, and Theobald was found in Lucca, in 1261. The name of S. Paulinus was inserted into the Rom. Mart. by Baronius, 12 July.—P. B.—C. E. (under Lucca).

Paulinus, M., at Rome; v. S. Orosius, 14 Aug.

Paulinus, M., Bp. of Treves; b. in the Gascogne, he followed S. Maximin to Treves and succeeded him in 349. He was present at the synods of Sirmium (351) and Arles (353). Being a strong partisan of S. Athanasius against the Arians, he was exiled to Phrygia, where he died, 31 Aug., 358. His body was brought to Treves by S. Felix in 396, elevated in 1402, and rediscovered under the ruins of his church, in 1738. F. 31 Aug. dp. maj. at Treves.—H. L.—P. B.

Paulinus and 4 companions, Mm. Place and era unknown. F. in the Old Syrian Mart. 7 Sept.—Achel., 39.

Paulinus, Archbp. of York, C. He had been a monk in S. Andrew's in Monte Celio at Rome and belonged to the second company of missionaries sent by S. Gregory I to aid S. Augustine in his labors for the conversion of England. He first preached the Gospel in Kent. S. Paulinus accompanied the Kentish princess Ethelburga, who had espoused King Edwin of Northumbria, to the North of England, and was elected Bp. of Northumbria, in 625; as such, he baptized S. Edwin, 12 April, 627. Pope Honorius sent him the pallium as first Archbp. of York. When after the battle of Hatfield Chase (633) and the death of S. Edwin the pagan reaction set in, Paulinus conducted Queen Ethelburga safely back to Kent, and as he could not return to Northumbria, was appointed administrator of the diocese of Rochester. He d. at Rochester, 10 Oct., 644. F. 10 Oct., Rom. Mart. dp. in England; dp. 1 cl. oct. in the province of York.—St. Angl.

Paulinus, C., the last Bp. of Capua Vetere. B. in England (?); on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem he was detained at Capua and elected bishop to succeed Radbert; after an administration of eight years he died at Sicopolis, whither he had fled during the invasion of the Saracens and after the destruction of the old city of Capua, 10 Oct., 843. His relics are in the Cathedral. F. 10 Oct., Rom. Mart., at Capua dp. maj. H. L.

Peithien (Peteona), V., daughter of Caw and sister of S. Gildas. She settled with her brothers, S. Egrad and S. Galgo (Allacus), in Anglesey.—B. G., IV, 90.

Peladius, C. Bp. of Embrun, successor to S. Gallicanus I.; 6th century. D. 6 Jan. F. at Embrun, 28 Jan.—P. B.

Pelagia, Aquila, Eparchius, and Theodosia, Mm., otherwise unknown. The Roman Mart. says they were companions of S. Domitius. F. 23 March.—Comm.—Chev.

Pelagia, V., M., of Tarsus in Cilicia, seems to be a combination of the Virgin and Martyr of Antioch and the apocryphal penitent of Jerusalem. According to a legend she was celebrated for her beauty and became engaged to a son of Emp. Diocletian. The young man, on learning that she was a Christian and hence one of the proscribed, committed suicide. Whereupon she was demanded in marriage by the Emperor himself and, when she refused, thrown into a red hot brazen steer. The story is a late invention. F. 4 May, Rom. Mart., full office in the Greek Church; also 7 Oct. commemoration.—H. L.

Pelagia, with four children, at Esna in Egypt. F. 1 May, Cal. Copt.

Pelagia, V., M., a girl of 15 years, a disciple of S. Lucianus at Antioch. As the soldiers approached to take her and her mother away, the two, hand in hand, rushed to the River Orontes and drowned themselves. S. John Chrysostom and S. Ambrose say that Pelagia jumped off the roof of her house. about 306. Her name is in the Canon of the Ambrosian Mass of Milan. F. 9 June, Rom. Mart., MGr.; originally at Antioch, 8 Oct. F. J.—Ruin. 540.—Rams.

Pelagia, M., at Samos; v. S. Januarius, 11 July.

Pelagia, M.; v. S. Anastasia, 29 July.

Pelagia, Matron, mother of S. Aradius of Limoges. She founded the monasteries of S. Paul and S. Michael; 6th century. F. 26 Aug.—P. B.

Pelagia (also called Marina or Margarita); a penitent at Jerusalem. According to a legend she was an actress and danseuse at Antioch, who was converted from a sinful life by a sermon of S. Nonnus, Bp. of Edessa, in 453. She forthwith begged for baptism, retired to Jerusalem, and passed the remainder of her life practicing penance in a cave on Mt. Olivet. That she dressed herself in man's clothes and passed as a hermit under the name of Pelagius, is against the evidence. D. about 457. She has been venerated at Jerusalem at least since 530. At Constantinople a church was dedicated to her (destroyed by Constantine Copronymus). It seems that her story is pure fiction. Her pretended relics are at Jouarre, France. F. 8 Oct., Rom. Mart.; at Jerusalem (Lat.), 16 Oct.; full office in the Greek Church, 29 Aug. in the Syrian Menology. Her name is in the Proskomide of the Russian Mass.—P. B.—J. H.—Syn. (8 Oct.) 64.—Rams.—A. Pelagius, M., at Rome; v. S. Silvanus, 1 March.

Pelagius, C., Bp. of Loadicea in Syria. At the synods of Antioch a. 363. of Tyana a. 365, and of Constantinople a. 381 he championed the orthodox faith against Arianism. Exiled to Arabia by Emperor Valens, he was recalled by Gratianus, in 378. D. after 381. F. 25 March, Rom. Mart.—Comm.

Pelagius, M., at Cordova; when 13 years of age, after an imprisonment of three years, he was killed by the Moors for his faith and his chastity, 26 June, 925. He is highly venerated in Spain. His body was transferred to Leon, in 967; to Oviedo, in 985. F. 26 June, Rom. Mart.; dp. at Cordova, Oviedo, Leon, Tuy, Braga, and Coimbra.—Comm.

Pelagius, M., at Aemonia in Istria, under Numerian, about 283. After the destruction of Aemonia his relics were brought to Città Nuova in Istria, where he is principal protector. He is also patron of the city and ancient diocese of Constance, because his relics were partly transferred there about 915. Some hagiologists, however, think that the Saint of Constance lived and died there and is a different person from S. Pelagius of Città Nuova. F. 28 Aug., Rom. Mart., which erroneously assigns this Pelagius to Coitances (Constantia in Gallia), instead of Constance (Constantia in Suevia). Peleus and Nilus, Egyptian bishops; Zeno, a priest, Paternuthius, and Elias, laymen, and 156 companions, Mm., in Palestine. They suffered under Maximian, about 310. On 20 Feb. the Rom. Mart. credits these martyrs to Tyrus in Phenicia; their leaders were the bishops Tyrannio, Silvanus, Peleus, and Nilus, and the priest Zenobius. After having been whipped, they were thrown to the beasts; when these refused to injure them, they were again tortured and, at last, beheaded under Diocletian.—Comm.—P. B. (20 Feb.) F. 19 Sept. Rom. Mart. dp. at Jerusalem; MGr. Mz. 9 Sept. in the Coptic Church. P. B.—H. L.—Eg., 80.—M. P., 13, 3.

Peter of Sebaste, Bp. of Sebaste, a brother of Ss. Basil, Gregory of Nyssa, and Macrina. B. about 340; he was the youngest of ten children, brought up by his mother, S. Emilia, and by his sister. Renouncing the study of the profane sciences he devoted himself to an ascetical life. In 362, he succeeded S. Basil in the direction of a religious house on the Iris river. In 370, he was ordained priest by S. Basil and (in 380), became bishop of Sebaste. He worked with his brothers to root out the Arian heresy; at his request S. Gregory of Nyssa finished S. Basil's treatise on the Hexaëmeron. F. 9 Jan., Rom. Mart.; he is not found in the Greek Menaea. The Basilian monks keep his F. with that of all the relatives of S. Basil, 30 May.—Comm.—C. E.—W. W.—Bush.

Peter Orscolo, Doge of Venice and Benedictine monk; sprung from the noble family of the Orscoli, b. at Rivo Alto, Venice, in 928; in 948, he was appointed commandant of the Venetian navy against the pirates and, 12 Aug., 976, elected Doge of Venice, after the violent death of the Doge Candiano. The story (S. Peter Damian) that he had taken part in the conspiracy against Peter Candiano, is without foundation. He restored the constitution, rebuilt the ducal palace and the church of S. Mark, and founded a hospice for pilgrims. 1 Sept., 878, he left his wife and children, went to the Benedictine monastery of Cuxa, in the Pyrenees, and took the habit there. He was a model of self-denial, humility, and charity. His last years he spent in solitude near Cuxa, under the personal guidance of S. Romuald. D. 10 Jan., 987. In 1027 he was canonized by the diocesan Bp. of Elne; his cult was approved in 1731. F. 10 Jan. Rom. Mart., at Venice 14 Jan. (Pmp.) dp. 2 cl. at Perpignan, 19 Jan. dp.—Comm.—P. B.—Off. pr.—A. S.

Peter of Nolasque (Nolasus), one of the founders of the Order of Our Lady of Ransom (Mercedarios). B. about 1182, at Mas Saintes-Puelles or S. Papoul, in the south of France; he chose the military career and took part in the crusade against the Albigenses; then he spent some time at the court of King Jayme I, of Aragon, where he became intimate with S. Raymond de Peñafort. In 1218 (or 1223) he reorganized a confraternity for ransoming captives from the Saracens (founded in 1192) and changed it into a religious order of knights, priests, and brothers; in this undertaking he was assisted by King Jayme and S. Raymond. His institute was approved, 17 Jan., 1235. He was General till 1249. He personally redeemed the first 400 Christian captives at Valencia and Granada; twice he made a journey to Africa; during his life time 2718 captives were ransomed. D. 25 Dec., 1256, at Barcelona. Peter Baptist, M., O. F. M.; b. in 1545. at S. Esteban, diocese of Avila; he took the habit of S. Francis, in 1567. On his way to the Philippine Islands he spent 3 years in the city of Mexico and in Michoacan. He arrived at Manila in 1583; there he worked zealously amongst the natives and founded several houses of his Order. In 1593, the governor of the Philippine Islands sent Peter Baptist and several other Franciscans as his ambassadors to Japan. They were well received and established convents, schools, and hospitals. When the "San Felipe" was stranded on the isle of Tosa, 20 Oct., 1596, the captain, an indiscreet boaster, to intimidate the local authorities, said that the missionaries had been sent to prepare for the conquest of the country by the king of Spain. The Emperor became furious and, on 9 Dec., 1596, ordered the missionaries to be imprisoned. On 5 Feb., 1597, six Franciscans (Peter Baptist, Martin of the Ascension, Francis Blanco, priests; Philip of Jesus (cleric); Gonsalvo Garcia, Francis of S. Michael (lay brothers), three Japanese Jesuits (Paul Miki, John Goto, James Kisai) and 17 native Franciscan Tertiaries were crucified at Nagasaki. Beatified, 14 Sept., 1627; canonized, 8 June, 1862. Peter, Metropolitan of Nice on the sea of Marmora, C.; for defending the cult of images he was exiled by the Iconoclast Emperor Leo the Armenian, in 815; for a while he held communion with the Iconoclasts, but repented; he was an intimate friend of S. Theodore the Studite. D. 10 Sept., 826. F. 22 Feb., MGr.—H. L.

Peter Damiani, Cardinal, Bp., Doctor, C., O. S. B., one of the most distinguished ecclesiastics of the calamitous time in which he lived. B. about 1006 at Ravenna, of the Onesti family, the youngest of many children, he was left in the hands of a married brother, who treated him more as a slave than as a relative. When grown up, he was sent to herd swine. His brother Damian, archpriest at Ravenna (hence the surname "Damiani"), at last assisted him to study at Faenza and Parma. For some time he taught at Ravenna. Disgusted with the life he saw around him, he took the Camaldolese habit at Fontavellano, in 1035, and was elected prior in 1043. Filled with zeal, severely ascetical, with a clear keen head, candid and unselfish, unrelenting against abuses, he first reformed the monasteries of Fontavellano, renewing in them the austere spirit of the Fathers of the desert. Soon his enthusiastic love for the Church drew him from the solitude of Fontavellano to fight against simony and incontinency among the clergy. He came into contact with popes, emperors, and all the prominent men of his time in Church and State. In 1057, Pope Stephen IX compelled him to accept the dignity of Cardinal-Bishop of Ostia. What an important part he played in the history of the Church is shown by the number of synods and diets at which he was present and the many journeys he made in the capacity of papal legate, e.g., his mission against the Pataria in Milan, in 1059; his diplomatic action against the Antipope Cadalous; his journey to France, in 1063, to settle a quarrel between Cluny and the bishop of Macon. In 1067 he was sent to Florence, in 1069 to the synod of Frankfort, in 1072 to Ravenna, to bring back his native city to obedience. Returning to Rome he died at S. Maria Vecchia, Faenza, 22 Feb., 1072. He was venerated immediately after his death. His relics are at Faenza. F. 23 Feb. in the Latin Church since 1828. He was declared a Doctor of the Church, 1 Oct., 1828. At Ravenna (minor patron) dp. maj.; at Faenza, dp. 2 cl. He is patron against headache. —P. B.—C. E.—Bush.—W.W.

Peter Gonzalez (Gundisalvus, San Telmo), C., O. P.; b. in 1190 at Astorga (Fromesta), of an old Castilian noble family. He was a canon at the Palencia Cathedral, but resigned to take the habit of S. Dominic. He preached the crusade against the Moors and was confessor to King S. Ferdinand of Castile. When Cordova was recovered from the Moors, his prayers and influence obtained kindly treatment for its Mohammedan inhabitants. He labored much in seaports and among sailors. Seafaring men in Spain look upon S. Peter Gonzalez as their special protector. By some misunderstanding they have come to invoke him as St. Elmo (San Telmo), the name of the far more ancient saint, St. Erasmus, who was once the recognized patron saint of seamen. D. 15 Apr., 1246, at Tuy. His body is at the cathedral of Tuy. In 1254, he was beatified for Spain; in 1741, his cult was approved for the entire Church. F. 14 Apr., Rom. Mart. Peter of Verona, M., O. P. Born at Verona, in 1206, of Manichæan parents. At the University of Bologna he met S. Dominic and joined the Order of the Friars Preachers. Gregory IX made him General Inquisitor, 13 May, 1251, and his superiors sent him to combat the Manichæan heresy then rampant in the North of Italy. He evangelized nearly the whole of Italy, preaching in Rome, Florence, Bologna, Genoa, and Como. Crowds came to meet him and followed him wherever he went, and conversions were numerous, until at length the Cathari succeeded in waylaying him. On his way from Como to Milano two assassins, hired by the heretics, killed him with their swords, 6 Apr., 1252. His body rests at S. Eustorgio, Milan. He was canonized 25 March, 1253. Peter II, Archbp. of Tarentaise, one of the greatest men of his age. B. in 1102, at Saint-Maurice-d'Exil in the Dauphiné. He took the Cistercian habit at Bonnevaux, about 1122, and was appointed abbot of Tamiens, in 1132. With the assistance of Amadee III, duke of Savoy, he built a hospice for pilgrims. In 1142, he was elected Archbishop of Tarantaise. After the Conclave of 1160, he was a stout defender of the rights of Alexander III against the claims of the Antipope Victor. For his zealous activity for Church and State he has been compared to S. Bernardine of Siena. Whilst attempting to reconcile Kings Henry II of England and Louis VII of France, he died at Bellevaux, 8 May, 1174. He was canonized 10 May, 1191. F. 8 May, Rom. Mart.; at Chambéry, 14 May dp.; O. Peter Celestine, C., Pope; called Peter de Murrone, from his hermitage on Mt.

Murrone near Solmona, founder of the Celestini. B. in 1215 at Isernia in the Neapolitan province of Molise of humble parentage. He took the Benedictine habit at the age of 17. His love for solitude led him first into the wilderness of Monte Morone and later into the still wilder recesses of Mte. Majella. Many kindred spirits gathered about him, eager to follow his austere rule of life, and before his death there were 36 monasteries bearing his name. He was elected Pope at Perugia, 5 July, 1294, against his will, by the influence of Charles II of Sicily. He resided first at Aquila, then at Naples. The pious hermit lacked the qualities required to govern the Church in those critical days. It is wonderful how many serious mistakes the simple old man crowded into a short five months. The affairs of the Curia fell into extreme disorder. He was crowned 29 Aug., 1294, but resigned 13 Feb., 1295. His successor, Boniface VIII, was forced to keep him in custody, lest an inimical use be made of the simple old Saint. He escaped to his cell in the Abruzzi, but was captured near Mt. Gargano, when he tried to flee across the Adriatic, and was confined at Fumone castle, near Anagni, where he died, 91 years old, 19 May, 1296. His relics are at Aquila, in the church of S. M. del Colle; he was canonized in 1313. F. 19 May; dp. in the Latin Church, instituted 21 June, 1668; dp. maj. at Isernia, Ferentino, Solmona, and Aquila; he is minor patron of Isernia and Urbino. Petersburg, Russia, where he took the Basilian habit. 14 Oct., 1782, he was elected Vladika of Montenegro. He succeeded in shaking off the Turkish yoke by several successful battles (1796), put an end to civil war and dissensions, rendered valuable aid to Russia during the Napoleonic war (1812), but kept the Church of Montenegro free from Russian influence. He removed his residence from Stanjevic to Cetinje. D. in his monastic cell at Cetinje, 18 Oct., 1830. When his body was found incorrupt, he was canonized by his compatriots, in 1836. He is the national hero and patron ("star") of Montenegro. His tomb is in a great cave. F. 20 June, Mrt.

Peter, the Prince of the Apostles. His Jewish name was Simon, son of Jona. To denote his office, Christ called him "Rock" (Kephas, Petros), which name he retained after the solemn election of the Apostles. He was born at Bethsaida, on Lake Genezaret. He was by trade a fisherman and married (his wife "Perpetua" is said to have suffered martyrdom at Rome before him). He was a disciple of S. John the Baptist and was led to Christ by S. Andrew. At first he attached himself to the Saviour only provisionally, accompanied him to Cana, Jerusalem, and back to Kapharnaum, and received him into his house, but returned to his trade. After the miraculous draught of fishes, he left "everything" and followed Christ, who chose him as his Apostle and, after Peter had professed him as "Son of the Living God", promised him the dignity of "Prince of the Apostles", declared him the keeper of the "keys of the Kingdom of Heaven," the "Rock" on which He would build His Church. Peter appears immediately after the Resurrection of Christ as leader of the Apostles. He presided at the election of Matthias, first preached the Risen Saviour, received the first converted Jews and the first pagans into the Church, wrought the first miracle, inflicted the first punishment, excommunicated the first heretic, and spoke the decisive word at the first council. He came to Antioch, preached the gospel in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, before 42. In 42, Herod Agrippa decided to have S. Peter executed, but he was freed from prison by an angel and fled "to another place," i. e., Rome. In 50, he returned to Jerusalem to preside at the Council of the Apostles. Of his sojourn at Rome the Acts of the Apostles give no account; it is, however, an established historical fact that S. Peter was the first bishop of Rome and suffered martyrdom there. He was crucified under Nero, with his head downward, 29

June, 64, in the Circus of Nero below the Vatican Hill (not on the Gianicolo). He was buried near the Circus; later (258?) his body was taken to the Catacomb on the Via Appia, but brought back to the Vatican by Constantine the Great. In 846, his tomb was strengthened by a heavy wall. Since the 11th century the heads of Ss. Peter and Paul are shown in the Lateran Church; if genuine they must have been brought there in 846. At the time of Xystus III the Roman Church possessed a chain of S. Peter; another chain was sent there by Empress Eudoxia. The Cathedra of S. Peter is venerated in the Vatican Basilica. With the Mamertine Prison the Holy Apostles have not been connected before the 14th century. H. Kellner (Jesus und Seine Apostel, 1908) reverses the established chronology: he tries to show that the Council of the Apostles was held in 37, the persecution under Herod Agrippa, in 44; then followed the missionary journey through Lesser Asia; S. Peter came to Rome for the first and only time toward the end of 53 or at the beginning of 54 and was crucified on 29 June, 55. The results of Kellner's researches, however, have been declined by other critics. Probably the year 258, given in the Liberian Calendar, is the date, not of the translation of the relics of Ss. Peter and Paul to the Platonica (now San Sebastiano) on the Via Appia, but of the institution of the feast of the holy Apostles, 29 June, to be celebrated in the Catacomb on the Appian Way. (*Del. Peter Claver, C., S. J., Apostle of the Negroes of Columbia. The son of a Catalonian farmer, he was b. at Verdù, in 1581; he obtained his degrees at the University of Barcelona, entered the Society of Jesus at Tarragona (1601); having finished his novitiate, he was sent to Mallorca for his studies and there attached himself to S. Alfonso Rodriguez. He continued his studies at Barcelona and from there started for South America, 10 Apr., 1610. He finished his theology at S. Fé de Bogotá and was ordained priest, March 19, 1616, at Cartagena, at that time the great slave-mart of the West Indies. Here he lived for 40 years, dedicating himself to the service of the negroes by a special vow, often misunderstood, much maligned, and always severely hampered in his work. Even his superiors looked askance at what they deemed his indiscreet zeal. With heroic charity he visited the poor slaves, who were languishing in misery, filled with hatred against their masters. He consoled them during their hard work, in their huts, on the sick bed, brought them victuals, nursed them, and instructed them in the faith with untiring perseverance. It is said that he baptized over 300,000 negroes. The time left to him from his work for the slaves, he used for the other inhabitants of the city, wherefor he is also called "the Apostle of Cartagena." D. at Cartagena, 8 Sept., 1654. Beatified, 18 July, 1850; canonized, 15 Jan., 1888, with S. Alfonso Rodriguez. F. dp. 2 cl. 9 Sept. S. Peter Arbues, M.; b. in 1442, at Epila in Aragon; he studied philosophy at Huesca, theology and law at Bologna. Returning to Spain he became a Canon Regular at Saragossa, where he made his religious profession, in 1478. In 1484, the Grand Inquisitor, Torquemada, named him provincial inquisitor for the kingdom of Aragon. All the accusations brought against him in writing and painting (Kaulbach) are unhistorical and uncritical. Not a single sentence of death can be traced to him, although he performed his duties with zeal and justice. The Marranos (relapsed, baptized Jews), however, whom he had punished, attacked him in the cathedral, 15 Sept., 1485 and inflicted several wounds, from which he died, 17 Sept. Peter of Alcantara, C., O. F. M., founder of the Reform Congregation of the Spanish Discalceates (Alcantarini). B. at Alcantara in Estremadura. He joined the Discalced Minorites at Manjaraes, when only 15 years old, was ordained priest a. 1524 and appointed superior of the province of S. Gabriel. The strict observance of the rule he intensified by new Constitutions (1540). Having on a journey to Rome, a. 1555, received the papal approval for his proposal, he, in the small monastery of Pedrosa, laid the foundation of his Reform Congregation, which surpassed all others hitherto instituted in austerity and poverty of housing, clothing, food and mode of life. His rule was approved by Pius IV, 8 Feb., 1462. During his lifetime the Alcantarines formed two provinces in Spain and two custodies in Portugal, later on 20 provinces. They continued to exist as a branch of the Observants under their own general procurator, until, in 1897, Leo XIII joined the different congregations of the brown Franciscans into one "Ordo Minorum." Peter also assisted S. Teresa in the reform of the Carmelite Order. D. 18 Oct., 1562, at Arenas. He is patron of night watchmen, for his vigils. Beatified in 1622; canonized 28 Apr., 1669. Peter the Patriarch, M., of Alexandria, "the Seal and Complement of Martyrs," successor of S. Theonas, in 300. He had been a sufferer in the Decian persecution, had taught at the catechetical school at Alexandria, opposing Origen with such success that his work marked the reaction of Alexandria against extreme Origenism. He drew up 14 canons for the treatment of the lapsed. Eusebius calls him a splendid model of a bishop, for his virtue as well as for his learning. When, during the persecution of Diocletian, he sought safety in flight, the Meletian schism broke out among his own clergy at the very time when the comforting of Christians in peril of death at the hands of the pagans called for the exercise of all his energies. He seems to have been the first to detect the incipient heresy of Arius. Upon his return to Alexandria he summoned a synod of bishops against Meletius of Lycopolis. Shortly afterwards he was put to death by order of the Caesar Maximin Daza, together with other Christians (311). He was succeeded by S. Alexander, the predecessor of the great Athanasius. The Copts call him "the Complement of Martyrs" because he was the last one who shed his blood for Christ by public authority at Alexandria before the Edict of Milan. Peter Chrysologus, C., Bp. of Ravenna, Doctor of the Church; b. at Imola in Italy in 406; his biography is written in the legendary style of the 9th century. He was educated and ordained deacon by Bp. Cornelius of Imola. In 433, he was elected bishop of Ravenna. Ravenna at that time was the residence of the Emperor of the Western Roman Empire and had been adorned with grand edifices by Galla Placidia. Peter was a strenuous adversary of Monophysitism. His surname, "Golden Word," he owed to his oratorical talents. He was the western counterpart of S. Chrysostom. For a list of his writings v. C. E., XI, 763. D. at Imola 2 Dec., about 450. Petroc (Perreux), abbot, C., the "Captain of the Cornish Saints." B. about 504, son of Glywys, a Welsh chief, brother of Gwynllyw, the Warrior. He left home to lead a hermit's life. About 523, he went to Ireland to study theology (at Kilnamanach?). He stayed there 20 (?) years and after his return founded the monastery of Petrocstow (Padstow). On his return from a journey to Rome he established Bodmin monastery, where he died, in 594. His relics were carried to Brittany (S. Meen) in 1177, but restored to Bodmin under King Henry II. F. 4 June and 4 Sept. (Tr. rel.) F. at Bodmin (princ. patron.) dp. 1 cl. oct. 4 June. Chr. Leg., 47.—B. G., IV, 94.

Petronax, abbot of Montecassino, C.; b. in Brescia. In 717, he went to Montecassino with several companions to lead a solitary life within the ruins of the monastery, which had been destroyed in 581. One of his disciples (729-739) was S. Willibald. Assisted by Pope Zachary, who gave the autograph of the rule of S. Benedict and the old measurer for bread and wine, he restored the monastery. D. 6 May, 747. F. 6 May.—H. L.

Petronia, a Greek M., killed by the sword. F. 29 Sept., MGr., Mz.

Petronia, "daughter of S. Peter," is identical with S. Petronilla, 8 Oct., Mrt.

Petronilla (Aurelia), V., at Rome, towards the end of the first century. She was probably related to the Roman family of the Flavii, a spiritual, not a natural daughter of S. Peter, to whom she ministered. She was buried in the cemetery of S. Priscilla. After the construction of the partly subterranean basilica, over her remains and those of Ss. Nereus and Achilleus on the way to Ardea her cult spread widely. In 757, her relics were transferred to an old mausoleum, near S. Peter's (chapel of S. Petronilla). The saint subsequently appears as the special patroness of the treaties concluded between the Popes and the Frankish emperors. At the rebuilding of S. Peter's, in the 16th century, her remains were brought to an altar in the upper church. F. 31 May, Rom. Mart., simpl. in the Latin Church, dp. maj. in S. Peter's Church (Vatican).—Mrt. Rom., 291.—P. B.—R. S. O. H., 82.—Rams.

Petronilla (Petronelle), matron, wife of S. Gilbert of Neuffontaines; she founded the nunnery of Ss. Gervais and Protais, at Aubeterre, in the diocese of Périgueux, France, where she was elected abbess, 12th cent. F. 13 July.—P. B.

Petronius, C., Bp. of Bologna, probably the son of Petronio, a Greek, who was præfectus prætorio in Gaul, 402-408; he made a pilgrimage to Egypt and Jerusalem. He was sent by the Emperor Theodosius the Younger to report to Pope S. Celestine on the case of the heretic Nestorius. While in Italy, he was promoted, notwithstanding his reluctance, to the bishopric of Bologna, (432). He probably built the Basilica (and monastery?) of S. Stephen, in which he copied the sanctuaries of Jerusalem. His "Life" (12th and 14th century) is spurious and full of anachronisms, fables, and falsifications. D. 4 Oct., about 450. His relics were discovered in the church of S. Petronio, in 1141. The great church in his honor was begun in 1390. He is principal patron of Bologna. F. 4 Oct., Rom. Mart., at Bologna, dp. 1 cl. oct.; Tr. of his Head (to San Stefano) Saturday after the Ascension, dp. 2 cl.—H. L.—Rams.

Philemon, Bp., and Fortunianus, M., in Greece. F. 27 Sept. Mz.

Philemon, a disciple of S. Paul; probably a citizen of Colossae, converted by S. Paul. His slave Onesimus having run away, S. Paul wrote the Epistle to Philemon to effect a reconciliation. According to the legend Ph. was Bp. of Colossae (not of Gaza). He was arrested at Colossae with his wife, S. Appia, during a feast in honor of Diana, scourged, buried up to the waist, and stoned to death. Appia was not his wife, but S. Apphia, another disciple of S. Paul. F. 22 Nov., Rom. Mart., dp. at Smyrna (Lat.); MGr. 22 Nov.—C. E.—W.W.—Buch.

Philemon, C., priest, hermit, F. 14 Dec., Mz. and Cal. Copt.—Syn., 186.

Philetaerus (Philoterius), M., son of Tatianus, prefect of Nicomedia. He was tortured under Diocletian, and again under Maximian. His executioners, converted by his fortitude, were beheaded. Then he was brought in chains to the isle of Proconnesus in the Propontis, where he died, in the house of S. Eubiotus, at Sigriane, in 311. His "acts" are unreliable. F. 19 May, Rom. Mart.; 30 Dec., MGr.—H. L.

Philetas, "the Senator" (Syncreticus), his wife Lydia, their sons Macedon and Theoprepis, Chronides, their jailer, and Amphilochius, a judge (or duke, or servant), Mm.; all suffered martyrdom under Hadrian, being thrown into boiling oil or water in Illyria. Their "acts" are untrustworthy. F. 27 March, Rom. Mart., MGr.; 23 March, Mz. at Sirmium and in Bosnia simpl. 29 March.—H. L.—P. B.

Philgas (Phialgus), a Gothic M.; v. S. Bathusius, 26 March.

Philibert, abbot, C.; b. about 608, near Eauze, in the south of France; educated at the court of Dagobert I. When 20 years old, he took the Benedictine habit at Rebais, under S. Agilus. Later he was elected abbot of Rebais, but lack of experience and a revolt of some unruly monks caused him to resign. After having studied monastic customs in some French monasteries, he founded Jumièges monastery, on the River Seine, and nearby a convent for nuns, over which he appointed S. Austreberta superior. For opposing Ebroin he was imprisoned at Rouen, then exiled to Poitiers, where he founded Noirmoutier and Saint-Benoit-de-Quinçay (677). After Ebroin's death he returned to Jumièges. D. at Noirmoutiers, 20 August, 686. His relics are at Saint-Philibert-de-Tournus since 875. F. 20 Aug., Rom. Mart., dp. 2 cl. (minor patron) at Luçon.—Off. pr.—P. B.

Philibert, M., in Spain; v. S. Fabricius, 22 Aug.

* Philip (Philippus), M., metropolitan of Moscow and all Russia. B. in 1507, at Moscow, of the Boljarin family Kolitshev. When 30 years old, he left the Czar's service and entered the Solowetzkii monastery in the rigid climate of the White Sea. He was elected abbot, and, in 1566, metropolitan. Because he reproved Iwan the Terrible for his atrocities, he was banished to Tver and there, later on, choked with a pillow, 23 Dec., 1569. His body was first brought to Solowetzkii, and from there to Moscow, in 1652. He was canonized by the Russian Synod in 1636. F. 9 Jan. and (Tr. rel.) 3 July in Russia. His name is in the Proskomide to the Russian Mass.—Mrt.—Mz.

Philip, C., Bp. of Gortyna, on the island of Crete. He wrote a treatise against the Gnostic Marcianus, which is now lost. D. about 180. F. 11 Apr., Rom. Mart.—Comm.

Philip, Apostle, one of the Twelve. He was a native of Bethsaida and a friend of S. Andrew. When called by Jesus, he led Nathanael to the Lord. He always takes the fifth place in the catalogue of the Apostles, and is mentioned three times by S. John as a confidant of Jesus. Polycrates relates that Philip, with two of his daughters who remained virgins, died at Hierapolis, whilst a third rests at Ephesus. Papias speaks of miracles wrought by S. Philip, of which he had heard from his daughters. The Montanist Proclus mentions four prophetic daughters of Philip, who lived and died with their father at Hierapolis. But these four daughters belong to Philip the Deacon and died at Caesarea. There is some confusion between the two Philips and their daughters. According to Polycrates, Philip preached in Soythia, then in Phrygia, and died in peace, whilst some apocryphal writings give a long description of his martyrdom, relating that he was bound to the cross and stoned. He is patron of fullers. His relics were first brought to Constantinople, then, under Pelagius I (d. 560), to Rome and deposited in the church of the Apostles on the day of its Dedication, 1 May, under John III (d. 573). F. in the Latin Church, with that of James the Lesser, 1 May dp. 2 cl. (formerly 1 May at Hierapolis. Hier. Mart.); in the Greek Church, 14 Nov. Mart., dp. at Catania and Mileto; dp. 1 cl. oct. at Argira, at Sinopoli Vetere and Favelloni (diocese of Mileto), 12 May.—H. L.

Philip Neri, Apostle of Rome and founder of the "Oratory," the most popular saint of the Holy City. B. at Florence, 21 July, 1515. At first he was helper to a merchant (a relative) at San Germano, at the foot of Mte. Cassino (1534–1551), but feeling that he had no vocation for a commercial life, he went to Rome and became a tutor in the house of the Florentine nobleman Galeotto Caccia, at the same time studying philosophy and theology and practicing charity. He became so remarkable for his learning that he was consulted by those who had been his masters. But, resolving to devote himself entirely to the service of God and the salvation of souls, he sold his books, distributed the money to the poor, and spent his time in hospitals, or in going among the worldly and irreligious to reclaim them. He saw that a society with this end in view was much needed, and, in 1548, gathered 14 companions into a congregation, attached to the church of San Salvatore in Campo. He was ordained in 1551. For 33 years he lived in the priests' house of S. Girolamo della Carità, near the Palazzo Farnese, where, first in a room, then in an oratory, he held conferences and spiritual exercises, accompanied by music and singing. This oratory became the centre of religious life in Rome. He introduced his exercises also in S. Giovanni dei Fiorentini (1564) and in S. Maria in Vallicella (1575). The last mentioned church he rebuilt in grand style (Chiesa Nuova) and removed to it the Congregation of secular priests which he had founded (Oratorians). He resided there himself after 1583, when his establishment was approved. Beyond S. Philip's intention, Oratories arose at Naples, Lucca, Fermo, San Severino, Palermo, and Camerino. He was elected General Superior, which office he retained until two years before his death. He founded the Bibliotheca Vallicellana and promoted historical studies (Baronius). Inspired by an intense charity, childlike cheerfulness and untiring zeal he became the advisor of Popes and Cardinals, the playmate of children, the friend of sinners and saints (Ignatius, Felice da Cantalice, Charles Borromeo, Camillus, Francis de Sales, Catharine dei Ricci). D. at Rome, 26 May, 1595. Beatified in 1615, canonized, 12 March, 1622. His body is in a shrine in the Chiesa Nuova. F. 26 May, Rom. Mart., dp. in the Latin Church since 1625; dp. 2 cl. at Rome and Florence. F. of his Patronage, 1st Sunday in Aug. at Sarsina. He is princ. patron of the diocese of Anglona-Tursi. In the church of the Massimo Palace at Rome, 16 March, F. of the Resuscitation of Paolo Massimo. The first Oratory in England was founded at Maryvale in 1848, by J. H. Newman. The Feast of St. Philip's Patronage is celebrated on various days: 28 Apr. in the Oratory of Genoa; 9 July in the Oratory of Naples, 3 Sept. in Oratory of Chioggia; 13 Nov. in the Oratory of Perugia. Philip, deacon and "Evangelist," one of the seven deacons of the Church of Jerusalem (Acts VI, 5). He was probably a Hellenist. He baptized Simon Magus (Acts VIII, 13) and the eunuch of Queen Candace (Acts VIII, 26). He had four daughters (Acts XXI, 9), who are said to have been in the Cenaculum with the Apostles on Pentecost. He resided with these daughters at Caesarea, where S. Paul met him. S. Jerome, in 385, was shown the house of Philip and the cubicle of his daughters at Caesarea. According to

S. Jerome (Ep., 108), Philip was Bp. of Tralles in Lydia. He does not belong to Hierapolis. F. 6 June, Rom. Mart., dp. at Smyrna and Jerusalem; 11 Oct., MGr.; 27 Aug., Baptism of the Eunuch., MGr.—W.W.—Syn., 69.

Philip Benizzi, C., the fifth General of the Servites. B. at Florence, 15 Aug., 1233; he studied philosophy (1246) and medicine at Paris and Padua and practiced medicine at Florence. In 1253, he was received into the Servite Order as a lay brother. For three years he lived in the solitude of Mt. Senario. In 1259, he was forced to receive Holy Orders. He travelled through Europe preaching and working miracles. When his ability was recognized, he rose rapidly from one post to another, until, 5 June, 1267, he was chosen Superior General. To him the Order owes its strong organization and rapid spread into Poland, Hungary, and India. He exercised great influence in political affairs, e. g., in the dissensions between Guelphs and Ghibellines (at Florence, Pistoja, Arezzo, Forlì, and Bologna) and in ecclesiastical matters (Council of Lyons, crusade against the Cathari and Flagellantes). D. at Todi, 22 Aug., 1285. His relics were brought to S. M. del'e Grazie, 21 Sept., 1598. Leo X approved his feast for the Servites; Clement X, 2 Apr., 1671, confirmed his cult for the entire Church. Philip, M., Bp. of Heraclea, the metropolis of Thrace. He suffered martyrdom at Adrianople. His companions were the decurio (deacon?) Hermes, who had formerly been the first magistrate of the city, and the priest Severus. The Eusebius of the Roman Mart. does not belong to this group. It was insistently demanded of them that they should deliver up the Sacred Books of the Church to be burned. On their refusal and steadfast confession of Christ they were taken to Adrianople, tortured, and burnt alive during the persecution of Diocletian (not Julian), 22 Oct., 304. Their "acts," the legal process instituted against them, appear to be genuine. F. 22 Oct., Rom. Mart. (taken from the Old Syr. Mart.). The Greeks do not venerate him.—Ruin., 440.—H. L.

Philip, M., Bp. of Fermo. B. at Fermo; he was elected bishop of Fermo after the persecution of Decius; he encouraged many to die for the faith during the persecution of Valerianus. B. at Tahal, about 440; he was an elegant writer and with the assistance of his Chorepiscopus, Polycarp, he produced a literal translation of the whole Bible (508). In 519, with 54 other Monophysite Bishops he was exiled to Philippopolis in Thrace, where he was killed, in 523. He was the most learned and most courageous champion of Severian Monophysitism. F. in the Jacobite Church. 18 Febr. and 10 Dec.; minor commem. 16 Aug. and 1 Apr. He is commemorated daily in the Syrian liturgies of S. James of Edessa and S. Maruthas.—Fort., 196.—Jac., 204.—Wr., 72.

Philoxenus, an Egyptian M.—Del Orig., 254.

Philumena, V.; her relics were found in the church of S. Lorenzo in Bogliolo at San Severino in 1527. She lived before 500. F. 5 July, Rom. Mart.; dp. 4 July at San Severino.—Off. pr.

Philumena, V., M. On 25 May, 1802, in the Catacomb of S. Priscilla on the Salarian Way, was found a broken tablet with the symbols of martyrdom and the inscription "Filumena Pax Tecum." The name was brought into connection with a body found in the tomb. On 8 June, 1805, these relics were transferred to the church of Mugnano, diocese of Nola, and enshrined under one of its altars. Pretended private revelations declared Philumena a noble virgin, martyred under Diocletian. Pope Gregory XVI granted an office and mass in her honor, 9 Sept., later on, 11 Aug. (Tr. to Mugnano). According to recent researches (Marucchi) the body found has no connection with the inscription. The "Life of S. Philumena" by Canon Di Lucia is purely fictitious. The body elevated in 1802 was not that of S. Philumena at all. The real S. Philumena, the object of the great devotion of the Curé d'Ars, had been taken with innumerable other bodies from her tomb to S. Prassede or S. M. ad Martyres or some other city church, perhaps under Pope Paul I (d. 767) or S. Paschal (d. 824). The body elevated belongs to some unknown Christian girl, who had been buried in the empty tomb of the martyr. F. at Mugnano, 11 Aug. dp. 2 cl.; F. of her patronage, 6 March. Before the reform of 1913 her feast had spread all over the Church.—Seeb., 490.—C. E.—H. L.

Phocas, M. (Anba Phocas); b. at Bontos in Egypt; under Herodian he was suffocated in a hot bath. F. 8 Jan.—Arab.-Jacob.

Phocas, M., at Antioch in Syria, in 320. A celebrated church was dedicated to him in Syria, another in Rome. In Syria he is venerated as protector against poisonous snakes. The Syrians say, "a snake spoke to him with a human voice." He may be identical with S. Phocas of Sinope, whose F. was kept at Sinope 22 Sept., at Antioch 5 March. F. 5 March, Rom. Mart. Phocas, M., Bp. of Sinope. He was suffocated in a bath. His "acts" are a deliberate forgery. He has often been confounded with Phocas, the Gardener, and hence is venerated as patron of gardeners. F. 14 July, Rom. Mart.; 1 June, Syr. Men. His relics are at Vienne (Dauphiné).—P. B.—A. B., 30, 252.

Phocas, M. F. 2 Aug., MGR.

Phocas, M., at Constantinople; v. S. Gregory, 9 Aug.

Phocas, M., a gardener near Sinope on the Black Sea. He entertained the soldiers who came to arrest him and, during the night, dug his own grave. When the soldiers ascertained his identity, they beheaded him, about 303 (panegyric of Bp. Asterius of Amasea). Mythical and folkloristic reminiscences have been connected with his cult, but his existence, martyrdom, and cult are established facts. The modern Greek Menaea say that Phocas, the Bishop of Sinope, and Phocas the gardener are two distinct persons, that the Bishop suffered martyrdom in 117, under Trajan, the gardener in 320. The latter is patron of gardeners and mariners. F. 22 Sept., Rom. Mart., full office in the Greek Church; in the Syrian Church 3 cl. Phosterius, a Greek saint, 4 Aug., Mrt.; he is probably identical with the preceding saint.

Photina, a Virgin, who, after suffering shipwreck, landed on the island of S. Martinianus; when the latter left, Photina continued his ascetic life on the inhospitable island. F. 13 Feb., Mrt.

"Photina, the Samaritan Woman, Joseph and Victor her sons, the army officer Sebastian; Anatolius, Photius, Photis, Paraseeve, and Cyriaca (sisters and brothers), all confessed Christ and attained martyrdom." Thus reads the Rom. Mart., 20 March, giving neither time nor place. F. simpl. at S. Paul's, Rome. Mz. adds to them Photo, a fourth sister and Dominus (Domina). The legend of S. Photina, the woman who spoke to Christ at Jacob's well (John IV), is very obscure (Synaxarium of S. Basil). She is said to have preached the Gospel at Carthage in Africa and to have died in peace after a captivity of three years. S. Victor was appointed governor of Galilee (Gaul); he converted S. Sebastian. With S. Anatolius they were brought to Rome, burned over a slow fire and flayed. Some were beheaded. The whole story is apocryphal. The Spaniards claim that Photina converted Domina, a daughter of Nero, and baptized her with 100 servants.—H. L.—Mz.—Comm.—Rams.—F. J.

Photinus (Pothinus), Bp., M. He was a disciple of the Apostles from Asia Minor; sent to Gaul by Pope S. Anicetus and appointed first bishop of Lyons. Under Marcus Aurelius, when 90 years old, he was ill-treated by the misguided mob, and died two days later in prison, June, 177. Others who died in prison were: Aristaeus, Comelius, Zosimus, Titus, Julius, Zoticus, Apollonius, Geminianus, Julia, Auxentia, Aemilia, Jamnica, Pompaea, Domna, Mamilia, Justa, Trophima, and Antonia. Pius, M., at Rome; v. S. Silvius, 1 March.

Pius V., C., O. P., Pope. 7 Jan. 1566 to 1572. His secular name was Michele Ghislieri of the noble Bolognese family of this name. B. in 1504, at Bosco, near Alessandria in Piedmont. He took the Dominican habit, at the age of fourteen, at Voghera, where he was professor of philosophy and theology for 16 years. In 1556, he was chosen bishop of Sutri and inquisitor for Lombardy. In 1557, he was created Cardinal, in 1559, transferred to Mondovi in Piedmont. He labored with S. Charles Borromeo to reform the clergy by enforcing a strict observance of the discipline of the Council of Trent. After his election to the papacy, he reinforced the principles of the bull "In Coena Domini," proclaiming thereby the supremacy of the Holy See over the civil power. During his entire pontificate his efforts were directed to the struggle against the Protestants and the Turks. He excommunicated and deposed Elizabeth of England and embraced the cause of Mary Stuart. Disregarding political considerations and following the path marked out by his conscience with unswerving pertinacity, he gave a new impulse to the activity of the Inquisition and condemned the writings of Baius. Finding that the poor suffered much from being driven to borrow from the Jews, he encouraged the savings banks instituted by Paul III, in 1559. His troops scoured the country and put down brigandage, which had become a recognized institution. Overcoming great difficulties, in 1570, he united the forces of Spain, Venice, and the Holy See, who under Don Juan d'Austria won a naval victory near Lepanto, 7 Oct., 1571. He instituted the F. of Our Lady of Victory (now of the Holy Rosary, 7 Oct.). He issued the Roman Catechism (1566), reformed the Breviary (1568), and the Missal (1570), reorganized the S. Poenitentiaria, and erected the Congregation of the Index (1571). A truly great reformer, he avoided even the appearance of nepotism. When the people beheld him in processions, barefoot and with uncovered head, his face beaming with piety and his long white beard covering his breast, they were excited to enthusiastic reverence; they believed that so pious a pope had never before existed. D. 1 May, 1572. Beatified in 1672; canonized in 1712. His relics are in S. Maria Maggiore. F. 5 May, Rom. Mart., dp. in the Latin Church (since 1713); at Alessandria (minor patron), dp. maj.; at Sutri and Nepi, and at Mondovi dp. 2 cl.; O. P. Pius I, M., Pope, 141-155. B. at Aquileja. During his pontificate the Gnostics Marcion, Valentine, and Cerdo harassed the Church. Famous Catholic teachers visited Rome, the most important being S. Justin. Whether he dedicated the church of S. Prassede is doubtful. F., not ancient, in the Latin Church, simpl. 11 July; dp. at Rome and at Udine = Aquileja.—C. E.—Buch.—P. B.

Placidus, C., hermit, O. Cist.; b. at Rodi (promontory of Mt. Gargano); after having made many pilgrimages, he became a hermit at Santo Spirito dell' Ocre (Puntula); he slept in a standing posture for 37 years. He possessed mystical gifts. D. 12 June 1222 (1248?)—H. L.

Placidus, M., companion of S. Sigisbert, M., founder and patron of Dissentis monastery in Switzerland. He was a scion of a noble Rhaetian family, who, by his frank speech, drew upon himself the hatred of Victor, the Rhaetian praeses, by whose command he was murdered. Of his existence there can be no doubt; his body was brought to Zurich. in 670. Cult approved, 6 Dec., 1905. F. with that of S. Sigisbert, dp. 11 July in Chur and St. Gall. dp. 1 cl. at Dissentis Abbey. Finding of his relics, 14 Febr. Tr. rel. 30 July.—H. L.

Placidus, C., disciple of S. Benedict; a native of Rome, b. about 515; at the age of 7 years he was sent by his father to Subiaco, the monastery of S. Benedict. One day he fell into the lake of Subiaco, below the villa of Nero, but upon the command of S. Benedict, was safely drawn to the land by S. Maur. This is all we know of him. The forged "acts" of Pseudo-Gordian identify him with S. Placidus of Messina (see below). F. 5 Oct., simpl. in the Latin Church, dp. 2 cl. O. S. B.—L. S.—P. B.

Placidus, Eutychius, Victorinus, Flavia, and 30 companions, Mm., of Messina in Sicily, probably under Diocletian. Their genuine acts are lost. Simeon, a Greek priest, in 1115, brought to Mte. Cassino forged acts of these martyrs which he claimed had been written by Gordius, an alleged companion of Placidus. These acts identify S. Placidus with the disciple of S. Benedict, make Eutychius, etc., brothers and sister to Placidus, claiming that they were sent by S. Benedict to Messina to found a monastery there (S. John's), and that they were killed by Saracen pirates from Spain, about 541. The story carries its falsehood on its face; yet, during the Middle Ages it crept into the Breviaries. The feast was adopted at Messina, about 1266, in consequence of an alleged vision. In 1588, in the foundations of the church of S. John, in an old Roman cemetery, bones were found, which were rashly concluded to be the bones of the martyred monks. In 1608, some more skeletons were discovered. These martyrs were elected principal patrons of Messina. F. at Messina 5 Oct. dp. 1 cl. oct.; 17 May, Tr. rel. dp. maj.; 4 Aug. Finding of their relics dp. 2 cl.—L. S.—P. B.

Planus, M., at Rome; v. S. Claudius, 8 Jan.

Plato, abbot, C.; b. about 735, at Constantinople, of rich parents. When 24 years old, he gave his property to his sisters and to the poor, and took the habit from S. Theoctistus at the monastery of the Symbols, Mt. Olympus, Bithynia. He was elected abbot there, about 770, but returned to Constantinople in 775. In 782, he was chosen abbot of Saccudion at Constantinople, where he introduced various reforms. He defended the cult of images at the synod of Constantinople, in 786, and at the second Council of Nicaea, in 787. He appointed his nephew, S. Theodore Studita, his successor in 794, and lived as a recluse at Saccudion. He was imprisoned and his monastery destroyed by Emp. Constantine VI. 806-811 he was exiled by Emp. Nicephorus; he survived, however, and died in his cell, at Constantinople, 19 March, 814. S. Theodore of Studium preached his panegyric. F. 4 Apr., Rom. Mart., dp. by the Latin Basilians; MGr. 5 Apr. Mz.—Comm.—P. B.

Plato, a celebrated M. at Ancyra. He was a rich youth, a brother of S. Antioch. He was laid upon red hot iron plates and his half-roasted flesh cut off in stripes. He languished in prison for eight days, and, at last, was beheaded, about 306. He is celebrated by S. Nilus (5th century) as patron of captives. A church was built in his honor at Constantinople, about 510. F. 22 July, Rom. Mart.; in the Greek Church, 18 Nov., full office; Syr. Men., 19 Nov.—Achel., 162.—H. L.

Platonis, V., deaconess and foundress of a nunnery at Nisibis in Mesopotamia. D. in peace, about 308. She was no martyr, nor does she belong to Ascalon. The two nameless martyrs which the Rom. Mart. erroneously mentions as her companions, were found at Ascalon. Some take the name "Platonis" to be that of a man. F. 6 Apr.—Comm.—MGr.—Mz.

Plectrudis, Matron, wife of Pepin of Heristal; b. of a noble Austrasian family. She exercised a salutary influence over her husband and with him made a number of donations to churches and monasteries. A source of deep sorrow for her was the adulterous connection of Pepin with Alpais (whose son was Charles Martel). In 702, she was reconciled to him. Having lost her two sons and (714) Pepin by death, she retired to the convent of S. M. in Capitolio, at Cologne, which she had founded, and where her F. was formerly celebrated, 11 Aug. D. about 725.—Gel.—H. L.

Polycarp, M., Bp. of Smyrna, consecrated by S. John the Evangelist about 95. S. Ignatius met him on his way to Rome (116) and afterwards wrote a letter to him. S. Irenaeus, when a boy (about 140), heard the sermons of this "gray prince of Asia." About 154, S. Polycarp discussed with S. Ignatius at Rome various ecclesiastical affairs, especially the question of the celebration of Easter, and converted many heretics from amongst the Gnostic Valentinians and Marcionites. Upon his return to Smyrna, on the occasion of some feast, the pagan population demanded the death of Polycarp. He retired to the country, but was captured and brought back to the city. There, before the Proconsul Statius Quadratus, Polycarp professed his faith and was sentenced to die by fire. When the flames would not touch him, he was pierced by a lance, 23 Feb., 155 (156?). His remains, "more exquisite than the most precious gems," were buried by the Christians and his anniversary was celebrated with great pomp. Of his letters only his epistle to the Philippians remains. His "acts" are the oldest account of a martyrdom that we possess; they conclusively prove the veneration of saints and relics in the ancient Church. His tomb is at Mt. Mustasia, near Smyrna. His relics are at Rome in S. Ambrogio in Massima. F. in the Latin Church, 26 Jan. (formerly 1 Feb.) at Smyrna, dp. 1 cl. oct. (princ. patron). F. of his Patronage, 15 March dp. maj. In the Greek and Syrian Churches: 23 Feb., full office. In the Melchite Church: 25 Jan. He is patron against ear-ache.—Passions, 111.—Ruin., 74.—C. E.—Buch.—Syr. (23 Febr.), 320.—Dand., V, 25.

Pontius (Pons) of Cimiez, M.; b. of pagan parents at Rome. He was a senator and prominent officer at the court of Emp. Philippus Arabs. During the persecution of Valerian he fled to Cimiez near Nizza, where he was beheaded after long torments. The Greeks say that Emp. Philip was converted by him. This conversion, however, is far from being proved and in the writings of a later period more than one saint is made to claim the distinction of having been the human means by which it was brought about. In the Middle Ages Philippus Arabs was considered the first Christian Emperor. The "acts" of S. Pontius are unreliable. His relics were transferred from Cimiez to Pons-de-Thomièr, diocese of Montpellier. F. 14 May, Rom. Mart.; at Nizza, dp. maj.; at Annecy and Albi, dp.; at S. Potentiana, V. Her sepulchre was found at Villanueva, Spain, and her relics were elevated in 1640. She is believed to have led a solitary life during the reign of the Visigoth kings. F. 17 Apr.—H. L.

Potentiana = S. Pudentiana.

Potentianus, M., Bishop of Sens; v. S. Savinianus, 31 Dec.

Potentinus, Simplicius, and Felicius, Co. According to a legend of the 9th century, Potentinus, with his two sons, Simplicius and Felicius, made a pilgrimage from Gascony to the holy places. At Treves S. Maximinus sent them to their countryman S. Castor, who lived at Carden on the Moselle. There they settled down and died; 4th century. Count Sigebodo of Hochsteden, in 920, brought their relics to Steinfeld monastery, O. Praem., where they were elected patrons. Cult approved in 1908. F. dp. at Treves and Cologne, 18 June.—H. L.

Pothinus = S. Photinus.—Lins., 102.—

Potitus, M., probably of Sardinia in Thrace (Sofia in Bulgaria), or of Sardes, the metropolis of Lydia (not of Sardinia). According to his fabulous "acts," he was beheaded at the age of 14 years, about 166, the Emperor Marcus Aurelius in person conducting his trial. It seems certain that he was put to the torture in Rome, but his execution appears to have taken place in some city of Southern Italy, perhaps at Ascoli Satriano in Apulia. His relics were found in Tricarico in SS. Trinità (14th century). He is highly venerated all over Italy. F. 13 Jan., Rom. Mart. He is princ. patron of Ascoli Satriano, 14 Jan. dp. 1 cl. oct.; 22 Dec. Transl. of his arm, dp. maj. He is also princ. patron of Tricarico diocese, 17 July dp. 1 cl. oct.; Tr. rel. 14 Jan. dp. maj.—1 July.—Mz.—H. L.—Off. pr.

Praecondius, hermit, C.; perhaps a native of Ireland. He came to France under Clovis and lived as a hermit near Vailly, diocese of Soissons, where his F. is kept simp. 1 Feb.; Tr. rel. 22 July.—P. B.

Praecordius, C., at Corbie. F. 26 Apr.—H. L.

Praejectus (Projectus, Priet, Prix), Bp., Marinus, and Elidus, Mm. Praejectus was born in the Auvergne and educated by S. Genesius of Clermont; he was elected abbot of Candedin and, in 666, bishop of Clermont. In 674, he hastened to King Childeric II to remonstrate against one Hector, a noble of Marseilles. On the way he healed the hermit Amarinus (Marinus), who attached himself to him. When they returned to Clermont, some friends of Hector waylaid and murdered them and the acolyte Elidius, at Volvic, near Clermont, 25 Jan., 674. Their relics in the 8th century were brought to Saint-Quentin-en-Vermandois and to S. Prix, Flavigny in Burgundy. F. 25 Jan., Rom. Mart.; at Clermont, 26 Jan. dp. maj.; 15 Febr. at Strasbourg; Tr. rel. 12 July.—P. B.—Mg.

Praejectus, C., Bp. of Imola; v. S. Projectus, 23 Sept.

Praesidius, M., in Tunis; v. S. Donatianus, 6 Sept.

Praetextatus, M., Bp. of Rouen, 550-586. Whilst Merovaeus was waging war against his father Chilperic, king of Soissons, he was accused of treason by Chilperic, and exiled by the synod of Paris, in 577. After Chilperic's death (584), he was honorably restored against the will of Queen Fredegund and, on Easter, 14 Apr., 586, slain in his cathedral by assassins sent by the queen, whose crimes he had denounced. F. 24 Feb. (tr. rel.), Rom. Mart.; at Rouen, sem. 26 Feb.—P. B.—Mg.

Praetextatus, deacon, M., at Rome; about 258. A cemetery on the Appian Way bore his name. 6 Aug.—Unt. Rom, 210.

Praetextatus, M., at Rome; v. S. Thrason, 11 Dec.

Pragmatius, C., Bp. of Autun. He was present at the synod of Epaons, in 517. His episcopal city suffered much during the wars between the sons of Clovis. He d. about 520. His relics are at S. Stephen's. F. 22 Nov., Rom. Mart.; at Autun, dp. 5 Dec.—P. B.—Mg.

Prais, an Egyptian bishop; v. S. Dioscurus, 21 May.

Praxeas (Eupraxia), V., daughter of Antigonus. F. 26 July, Cal. Copt.

Praxedis, V. She was a Roman Virgin of the 2nd century, the reputed daughter of Senator Pubens and a sister of Ss. Novatus, Timothy, and Pudentiana. She was a fervent Christian and rendered great services to the Church. She devoted her wealth to relieve the poor, especially the Christians languishing in prison. Probably she was neither the daughter of Pubens, nor a sister of S. Pudentiana. Her relics are in a chapel under the high altar of her titular church, which, with that of S. Pudentiana, contests the claim to be the oldest church in Rome. In the nave is a well, into which Praxedis is said to have cast the sponge with which she had mopped up the blood of the martyrs. F. 21 July, Rom. Mart., simpl. in the Latin Church; at Milan, solemn, because S. Charles Borromeo was Cardinal of S. Prassede.—C. E.—W.W.—Buch. H. L.—F. J.

Praxedis, V., M.; she belongs to the alleged Ursuline martyrs. Her relics are at S. M. in the Garden, Cologne. F. 21 July.—Gel.

Primus, M., at Lyons; v. S. Alcibiades, 2 June.

Primus and Felicianus, Mm., two aged Roman citizens who, after many torments, were beheaded under Diocletian on the Via Nomentana, about 297. A basilica was built over their sepulchre. They are the first martyrs whose bodies were brought from their basilica outside the gates to a church within the walls (San Stefano Rotondo), in 640; their "acts" were composed at the same time from some original documents. Parts of their relics were transferred to Leggiuno, diocese of Milan (F. of the Transl. 1 Aug.) and to Stein in Carniola (874). The rest of their bodies was found at San Stefano, in 1625, and solemnly elevated. F. 9 June, Rom. Mart.; simpl. in the Latin Church.

Principinus, M., at Yvré-sur-Eule, Bourbonnais, in 380. His relics are at Souvigny, diocese of Moulins. He is titular of the church of Herisson. F. 12 Nov. He was a brother of Ss. Espain (Spanus), Lupicianus, Beninus, Bié, Marcellianus, Messanus, Genitor, and Tridorius, Mm.—P. B.—Mg.

Principius, C., Bp. of LeMans, 496-501. He was celebrated for his love of the poor and sick. F. 11 Sept.; at LeMans, 16 Sept. dp., at Laval simpl.—P. B.—Mg.

Principius, C., Bp. of Soissons, France, a son of Amelius, count of Laon, elder brother of S. Remy. He was married and had a son, Lupus. He was elected to succeed Edibius in the see of Soissons some time in the 5th century. His relics were burnt by the Calvinists, in 1567. F. 25 Sept., Rom. Mart.; dp. at Soissons.—P. B.—Mg.

Prisca (also called Priscilla), V., M., at Rome, on the Via Salaria (not on the 10th milestone on the Way to Ostia). Nothing is known of her except her name and cult. Her "acts" are an imitation of the passion of S. Tatiana. Her tomb was venerated, in the 7th century, in the catacomb of Priscilla on the Via Salaria. In the 5th century we hear of her titular church on the Aventine Hill, to which a legend in the 9th century gave the Apostolic title of Ss. Aquila and Priscilla. On the site of her church on the Aventine most probably stood the house of the parents of S. Prisca; close by lived Aquila and Priscilla. That her body was discovered on the Way to Ostia by S. Eutychianus, in 280, and brought to the house of Prisca, is unhistorical. F. 18 Jan., Rom. Mart., simplex in the entire Latin Church.—H. L.—P. B.—Comm.—F. J.

Priscus (Prix), Cottus, and companions, Mm., in 274. They were beheaded at Toucy-sur-Yonne, near Auxerre, where they had concealed themselves. They were citizens of Besançon. Priscus was a Roman army officer; many of his companions were soldiers under his command. They fled from Besançon during the persecution under Aurelian. The head of S. Priscus was found, in 420, by S. Germain. F. 26 May, Rom. Mart. dp. at Sens; dp. at Besançon, 27 May.—P. B.—Mg.

Priscus, M., at Tuburbum; v. S. Rufus, 30 July.

Priscus, first Bp. of Capua, M. Ancient documents relate that he was one of the 72 disciples of Christ, born in Jerusalem of Jewish parents and ordained Bp. of Capua by S. Peter. He resided near the Porta Albana, was pierced by daggers on the Via Aquaria, under Nero, and buried on the spot of the modern town of S. Prisco. His relics, later on, were brought to the cathedral. F. 1 Sept., Rom. Mart., dp. 2 cl. at Capua, dp. 1 cl. oct. at S. Prisco; dp. 1 cl. also at Cajazzo, because he introduced Christianity there. At Naples, 1 Sept., St. Priscus, Canio, and companions, Cc., dp.—P. B.—H. L.

Priscus II, C., Bp. of Capua. He was one of the African bishops (Castrensis, Tamarus, Rosius, Heraclius, Secundinus, Adjutor, Marcus, Augustus, Elpidius, Canion, and Vindonius), who were sent afloat as exiles on a helmless ship during the Vandal persecution, 5th century. He succeeded Bishop Symmachus at Capua, reformed the discipline of the clergy, and preached against the Manichaeans. D. at Capua, 14 Aug., before 460. His relics were found in 1139 and brought to Mirabella, diocese of Avellino. He may be identical with S. Priscus of Nocera. F. at Capua, 15 Sept. dp. 2 cl.; 1 Sept., Rom. Mart.; v. S. * Procopius, M.; b. at Varna in Bulgaria, he had been a hermit on Mt. Athos; through weakness he renounced Christ and became an Islamite. He atoned for the scandal given by professing his faith openly, and was beheaded at Smyrna, in 1810. F. 25 June, Mz.

Procopius of Sazawa, abbot, C.; b. at Chataun, Bohemia; educated in a Basilian monastery; later on he married and, according to Oriental custom, was ordained and given a canonry in the cathedral of Prague. Desiring closer union with God, he left his family and retired into the solitude of the Sazawa valley, where he built a church and monastery. D. 25 March, 1053. Canonized, 4 July, 1204. He is one of the patrons of Bohemia. F. 4 July dp. 1 cl. oct. in Bohemia; dp. maj. in Moravia; in Russia, 16 Sept.—Off. pr.—H. L.

Procopius, Megalomartyr, one of the great military martyrs of the Eastern Church. According to the simple and reliable account of Eusebius, he was b. at Jerusalem, led an ascetic life at Scythopolis in Samaria, officiated as lector, exorcist, and interpreter of Syriac. He was arrested and conducted to Caesarea, tried before the judge, and, since he refused to offer sacrifice to the gods, beheaded the same day. His cult in the Orient is very ancient; in the 5th and 6th centuries churches existed in his honor at Caesarea and Scythopolis. He is a popular saint, whose person was surrounded by a luxuriant wreath of legends. The severe ascete was changed into a Roman warrior, who was miraculously converted by the apparition of a cross. His "acts" draw out the martyrdom into many weeks; long polemic dialogues and stupendous miracles are inserted. Some old martyrologies keep Procopius the ascete and Procopius the Roman general apart; there appears even a third Procopius, "the Persian" (23 Nov.); but all three are identical. F. 8 July, Rom. Mart. (which only knows the ascete); in the Greek Church, full solemn office in honor of the fantastic military leader; in the Syrian Church 3 cl.—Milit. 75.—Ruin., 387.—H. L.—P. B.

* Procopius of Ustjug, "Miracle Worker."

He was a Norwegian merchant who took a monk's habit at Chutyn monastery, gov. Nowgorod, and, to humble himself, became a "fool for Christ's sake" at Ustjug. He possessed the gift of prophecy. D. in 1303. His relics are in the cathedral. F. 8 July in all Russia.—Mrt.—Mz.

Procopius, "the Ascete," of Scythopolis. F. 22 Nov., Mz. He is identical with the saint of 8 July.

Procopius and Christophorus, Greek Mm. F. 24 Nov., Mz., MGr.

* Procopius of Wiatka, M., "Fool for Christ's sake." B. at Korjash, gov. Wjatka, Russia; he was killed by his own relatives, in 1627. His relics are at the Tryphon monastery, Wjatka. F. 21 Dec. in Russia.—Mrt.—Mz.

Procula (Procla), M., in Africa; v. S. Marcellinus, 2 Apr.

Procula, V., M., patroness of Gannat, diocese of Moulins; b. at Rodez of noble parents; she left home secretly on the eve of her marriage and led a solitary life in a cave near Gannat, where she was killed by Geraut, her bridegroom, or by an ignorant mob; 11th or 12th century. F. 3 Sept. dp. at Rodez; 13 Oct. at Gannat; Tr. rel. 9 July, dp. at Moulins.—P. B.

Procula (Procla), reputed wife of Pontius Pilate, who (Matth. XXVII, 19,) warned him "to have nothing to do with that just man." Some early writers claim that she believed in Christ, was baptized, and led a pious life. F. 27 Oct., MGr., Mz.; in the Abyssinian Church (with her husband), 19 June.—Dand., 137.

Proculus (Proclus), M., on Mt. Sina; v. Theodulus, 14 Jan.; or Isais.

Proculus, Ephebus, and Apollonius, Mm. According to the unreliable "acts" of S. Valentine these were noble Athenians, converted at Rome by Ss. Craton and Valentine of Terni. They brought the body of S. Valentine to Terni and there gained a martyr's crown, about 273. Their relics were found in 1605 and are now in the Carmelite Church. The Bollandists identify this Proculus with the bishop of Terni (14 Apr.); Apollonius and Ephebus belong to some other town. F. 16 Feb. dp. maj. at Terni.—H. L.—Off. pr.

Proculus of Bisignano, C. F. 19 Feb. dp. in the diocese of Bisignano.—O.

Proculus, C., Bp. of Verona, 4th century. He was imprisoned for visiting Ss. Firmus and Rusticus, but set free, and died in peace. F. 23 March dp. at Verona.—H. L.

Proculus II, M., Bp. of Terni (Narni?); b. in Syria, perhaps at Damascus, successor of Valentine II. He converted many Arians and for that reason was beheaded by order of Totila, 1 Dec., 543. He is sometimes identified with Proculus, the disciple of S. Valentine of Terni; the history of both Proculi is badly mixed up. F. 14 Apr. and again (as bishop of Narni) 1 Dec.; at Terni, 1 Dec. dp.—H. L.—Off. pr.

Proculus, M., in Africa; v. S. Secundinus, 14 May.

Proculus, M. His apocryphal "Passion" relates that he was a soldier, that he killed the emissary of the Emperor who came to Bologna to persecute the Christians, and that he was beheaded in 303 (?). Another legend adds that he carried his head to the site of his tomb. According to S. Paulinus of Nola (poem 27) he was crucified. His cult is very ancient. His relics were elevated, in 1490, in the Benedictine church (Piazza S. Mammolo). F. 1 June dp. maj. (minor, formerly princ. patron) at Bologna. Delehaye (Orig., 374) indicates the probability that S. Proculus of Bologna, S. Proculus, of Ravenna, and S. Proculus of Pozzuoli are identical.—Off. pr.

Proculus, M., Bp. of Bologna, 540-542. With many Christians he was beheaded by King Totilas. In 900, his relics were brought to S. Sisto (now San Proclo). The relics of the soldier and those of the bishop are in the same church. F. 12 July.—H. L.

Proculus and Hilarion, Mm.; b. at Kalipta, near Ancyra, Asia Minor; they suffered under Trajan, in 115. F. 12 July, Rom. Mart., in the Greek Church full office.—Mrt.

Proculus and Maximus, Mm.; they were stone masons at Constantinople. Their apprentices were Ss. Florus and Laurus. F. 18 Aug. at Scutari dp. (Ss. Proculus, Maximus, Florus, and Laurus).—H. L.

Proculus, M.; v. S. Afriges, 21 Oct.

Proculus (Preuil), M., Bp. of Autun; he is said to have been beheaded during the Hun invasion of the 5th century. F. 4 Nov., Rom. Mart.; 6 Nov. at Autun.—P. B.

Proculus, deacon, M. He was deacon of the Church of Puteoli (Pozzuoli). On a visit to his friend, the deacon Sosius of Misenum, who was in prison, he was arrested and whipped. He was beheaded near Solfatara, with S. Januarius, in 305. This story is a late legend. Proculus does not belong to the cycle of S. Januarius, but is identical with S. Proculus of Bologna. F. 16 Nov. (princ. patron) dp. 1 cl. oct.; at Pozzuoli, Tr. rel. 13 May dp. maj. in the Latin Church, 19 Sept., with S. Januarius and companions.—H. L.

Proculus (Proclus), Patriarch of Constantinople. He was a disciple of Atticus and of John Chrysostom, deacon and priest at Constantinople. In 426, he was appointed bishop of Cyzicus, but was rejected by the clergy and people. In 434, he succeeded Maximian in the see of Constantinople. He energetically supported S. Cyril in his fight against Nestorius. Under his name we possess 27 sermons for different feasts, amongst them the celebrated sermon held in honor of the Mother of God in the presence of Nestorius, when Proculus was still a priest. He transferred the relics of S. John Chrysostom to Constantinople, 27 Jan., 438. D. 12 July, 446. F. 24 Nov. Rom. Mart., dp. at Constantinople. In the Greek Church full office; another feast 20 Nov. at Cyrus church in Constantinople, full office.—C. E.—W.W.—P. B.

Proculus, C., Bp. of Ravenna ("elected by the Dove"), about 132-142 (probably later). The chronology of the ancient bishops of Ravenna is very doubtful. F. 1 Dec. (minor patron) dp. maj. at Ravenna.—H. L.

Proculus, M., Bp. of Verona. He suffered imprisonment and torture and, afterwards, banishment in the persecution under Diocletian, but contrived to return to Verona, where he died early in the 4th century. F. 9 Dec., Rom. Mart.; now at Verona, 23 March; Tr. rel. 22 Sept.; at Bergamo, 9 Dec. dp. maj. Tr. rel. 7 Sept.—H. L.

Proculus, M., at Palermo; v. S. Eustotius, 9 Dec.

Proculus, Nectarius, and Alexander, Bps. of Constantinople; they have a collective feast on 22 Dec.—Rb. Sl.

Profuturus, Bp. of Pavia. F. 1 Nov.—H. L.

Projectitus, M., servant of S. Grata at Bergamo. His relics were elevated, in 1290, and brought to the cathedral, in 1704. F. 18 Aug. at Bergamo dp.; Tr. rel. 5 May.—H. L.

Projectus, Bp. and Elpidius, lector, Mm., minor patrons of Parenzo-Pola in Istria = S. Praejectus of Clermont. F. 25 Jan. dp. 2 cl. at Parenzo-Pola; 26 Jan. simpl. at Cologne.—H. L.

Projectus, M., said to have been a deacon of S. Evasius of Asti. He fled from the Arians to Sedula (Casale), where he was beheaded with 146 (?) companions by the Arian Lombards, 7th or 8th century. F. 28 (25) Jan. dp. maj. at Casale.—H. L.

Projectus and Marinus (Amarinus), dp. at Basle, 28 Jan = S. Praejectus of Clermont. Their F. is kept also at Beinwil Abbey.

Projectus, C., Bp. of Imola. With Bp. Arcadius he was sent to the Council of Ephesus by Pope Celestine in 431. He also assisted at the Roman synod against the Monophysites. D. about 460 (483?). F. 23 Sept. dp. maj. (minor patron) at Imola. Tr. rel. 21 May sem.—H. L.

Promachus, M., at Nicomedia; v. S. Eutyches, 20 Oct.

Promasius, abbot near Forçalquier; 25 Aug.—P. B.

Promus, Elias, Gennaeus, Aulis, and Zeno, monks of Choziva monastery, near Jerusalem. F. 8 Jan., Mrt.

Promus, M., at Ascalon; v. S. Ares, 14 Dec.

Promus, Ares, and Elias, Egyptian Christians; they were burned alive at Ascalon in Palestine while on the way to Cilicia. They are honored at Constantinople in the church of S. Philemon. F. 19 Dec.—Eg., 80.

Prophets, Feast of the Holy. On Dec. 1 the Maronites of Mt. Lebanon celebrate the feast of the four greater and the 12 minor Prophets (Nilles, I, 486). The Armenians have a feast of "All the Prophets," on Tuesday before the first Sunday in Advent, but a special feast of the Lesser Prophets on Tuesday after the 2nd Sunday after the Transfiguration of Christ. (Nilles, II, 619). Prophets are (1) All the Saints of the Old Law who lived from the time of Moses to the time of Christ; (2) the sixteen inspired men whose prophecies are contained in the Old Testament. The Melchites have a feast of "All the Prophets," 30 Aug. Aug. 16th they celebrate the four great Prophets, calling them: Isaias, Jeremias, Zacharias, and Ezechiel.

Propontis, Mm. of the. Two martyrs who, at Parion on the Propontis (Marmora), were

Propolus, M., at Alexandria; v. S. Serapion, 13 July.

Prosdoco, V., M., near Edessa; v. S. Domnina, 4 Oct.

Prosdocimus, C., first Bp. and Apostle of Padua in Northern Italy. He was of Greek nationality, a disciple of S. Peter, with whom he came to Rome from Antioch; from there he was sent to Padua to preach the gospel. He evangelized the country about Vicenza, Este, etc., residing at Padua. His forged "acts" are a composition of the 12th century. D. 7 Nov., about 100, under Hadrian. F. dp. 1 cl. oct. (princ. patron) at Padua. 7 Nov., Rom. Mart.—H. L.—Off. pr.

Prosdocus (Prosdokas), Veronica (Bernice), Dionina (Domnina), Octavia, Potamia, Prudentia, Phocas, Syrus, and Lucius, Mm., at Antioch in Syria. F. 15 Apr.—Chev.

Prosdocus, M., at Alexandria; 29 Apr.

Prosdokas, Veronice, and Romanus, Mm., at Antioch. F. 20 Apr., Old Syr. Mart. These three may be the original martyrs of the preceding group; Octavia, etc., probably belong to some other group.—Chev.

Prosper, M., Minor patron of Lesina in Dalmatia. F. 10 May, dp. 2 cl. He may be identical with the preceding saint.—Off. pr.—H. L.

Prosper Tiro of Aquitaine, "the Best Disciple of S. Augustine" and defender of his doctrine on grace. B. towards the end of the 4th or the beginning of the 5th century, in Gascony; he was a layman, probably married; a fine theological scholar, a versatile and enthusiastic defender of S. Augustine's doctrine on predestination and grace, and an untiring antagonist of Semipelagianism. He seems to have lived as an ascete in the Provence, where his teaching on grace met with much opposition from the monks of Marseilles and environs. After S. Augustine's death, to protect his memory, Prosper obtained from Pope Celestine I a letter imposing silence on the slanderous bishops of Gaul. D. about 463. F. 7 July dp. at Tarbes (Prosper Doctor Aquitaniae); 25 June O. S. A.—C. E.—Buch.—W.W.—Mg.—P. B.

Prosper, C., Bp. of Reggio in Emilia (not of Reji in the Provence), a personality veiled in obscurity; erroneously identified at Reggio with Prosper of Aquitaine. His cult spread all over Emilia. He is buried at Reggio, in the church of S. Apollinaris outside the walls. His relics were brought into a new church, 24 Nov., 703. He is principal patron of the city and diocese of Reggio. F. 25 June dp. 1 cl. oct.; Tr. rel. 24 Nov. dp. 2 cl. Finding of his body (1601), 16 Nov. dp.; F. of his Patronage, 11 March. dp. maj.—Off. pr.—Rheg.

Protasius, M., at Cologne. F. 4 Aug., Rom. Mart. He is unknown at Cologne on the Rhine. He may be identical with S. Protasius, the companion of S. Gervasius (19 June). Some relics brought from Milan to Cologne may have given rise to the special feast on Aug. 4. Perhaps this S. Protasius belongs to Cologne near Lombez, France, to Colonia in Armenia, or to Colonia Taxara in Cappadocia.—H. L.—Rams.

Protasius, Bp. of Avenches (Wiflisburg), canton Waadt, Switzerland. D. in 507 (or c. 650?), near Bière in the Jura. In 886, a church was dedicated to him at S. Prez (Prex). His cult was approved in 1605. F. 6 Nov., dp. in the diocese of Lausanne-Geneva, since 1234.—P. B.—Mg.

Protásius, C., Archbp. of Milan, 331-352. He defended the cause of S. Athanasius against the Arians at the synod of Sardica, in 343. S. Charles transferred his relics from his own church to that of S. Victor. F. 24 Nov., Rom. Mart., solemn at Milan.—P. B.

Protasius, a hermit in the Auvergne, who sent one of his disciples to console S. Purgain in his struggle against the demons. 6th century. F. 24 Nov.—P. B.

Proterius, M., Melchite (Greek) Patriarch of Alexandria, 451-457. He had been archpriest and head of the orthodox (Catholic) party at Alexandria. After the deposition of Dioscurus (452), he was elected to succeed him by the Greek nobles of the city. His position was very difficult, since the people and the monks held on to Dioscurus. His principal supporter was the Emperor Marcianus, after whose death (1 Feb., 457) he was killed by the Monophysite party of Dioscurus, in the church of S. Quirinus, Easter, 457. His body was dragged through the streets, hacked to pieces, and burnt. F. 28 Feb., MGR.; by the Catholic Copts, 3 Feb. (not in the Western Church).—Fort., 184—H. L.—Biogr.

Protus, M., at Aquileja; he instructed Ss. Cantius, Cantianus and Cantianilla in the Christian religion and was beheaded with them, 31 May, 290, at Grado. F. in Istria dp. 31 May.—H. L.

Protus and Hyacinthus, brothers (?), famous Roman Mm., under Valerian and Gallienus (257?). They probably died by fire at the stake. Their "acts," however, are pure fiction. These "acts" claim that P. and H. were Egyptians and servants of S. Eugenia. The empty tomb of S. Protus and the untouched sepulchre of S. Hyacinthus (traces of fire on the bones) were found by Marchi (1845) in the catacomb of S. Hermes, on the Via Salaria Vetere. The body of S. Hyacinthus is now at San Giovanni dei Fiorentini, that of S. Protus in the church of the Propaganda. F. 11 Sept., Rom. Mart., simplex in the entire Latin Church; at S. Giovanni dei Fiorentini, 21 June, Tr. rel.; at Como, 11 Sept. dp. maj. (formerly also Tr. rel. dp. 14 May; in 724, from Rome; elevation in the cathedral, in 1317). F. of S. Protus at the Propaganda last Sunday after Pentecost. Relics also at Florence, church of the Holy Angels: 7 Jan. Tr. rel. simp. (a. 1428). In the Armenian Church, 21 Jan., with Ss. Protus, priest, and Januarius, deacon, Mm., at Sassari, Sardinia; they were sent there by Pope S. Cajus to preach the Gospel and were martyred under Diocletian, at Porto Torres, not far from Sassari. F. 25 Oct., Rom. Mart.—H. L.—Rams.

Prouents = S. Prudens.

Provinus, C., Bp. of Como. He was a native of Gaul, a disciple of S. Ambrose, coadjutor of S. Felix, Bp. of Como, and became his successor in 391; he strongly resisted the Arian heresy. D. about 420. F. 8 March. dp. at Como.—H. L.

Prudens (Prouents), deacon, M., in Narbonne, 3rd century; his relics were brought to the abbey of Bèze, diocese of Dijon, 6 Oct., 883. F. at Bèze, 6 Oct.—P. B.

Prudentia, V., O. Erem. S. Aug.; b. at Milan; d. at Como, in 1492. F. 6 May.—H. L.

Prudentius (Galindo), C., Bp. of Troyes. B. in Spain; when very young, he fled from the Saracen invasion to the court of France, where he changed his native name Galindo to Prudentius. He was chosen bishop of Troyes, about 846. He was an adversary of Hincmar and Scotus Eriugena in the controversy on Predestination, defending a double predestination, one for reward, the other for punishment, not, however for sin. Alban Butler defends him against the charge of having in certain passages of his work advanced erroneous doctrines in reference to abstruse points of theology. His name, however, is not in the Rom. Mart. He continued the Annales Bertiniana from 835-861. D. 6 Apr., 861. F. at Troyes, dp. 6 Apr. The Bollandists reject his cult.—P. B.—H. L.

Prudentius, Bp., C. Born in Armentia, Spain; he first attached himself to the hermit Satrius, then evangelized the territory of Calahorra, and finally retired to Tarazona, where he was ordained priest. The bishop of Tarazona appointed him his archdeacon. He died as bishop of Tarazona, at Osma, probably in the 9th century (or 4th or 5th century?). It seems several bishops of the same name have been run into one. His story is utterly unreliable. F. 28 Apr., Rom. Mart., dp. 1 cl. oct. at Tarazona; dp. at Osma, Spain.—H. L.—P. B.

Ptolemaeus, M., a son of Nestorius of Tentyris in Egypt. He was done to death by order of the governor Arrhianus, near Antioch. He has a church at Ichmin. F. 7 Dec.—Eg. 97.

Publia (Poplia), head of a community of nuns near Antioch. She was the mother of the archpriest John of Antioch. After her husband's death she devoted her life to charity. She founded in her house a community of virgins, who, when Emperor Julian the Apostate, on his way to the disastrous campaign against the Persians, in 362, passed their house, sang: "The images of the heathens are of gold and silver; works of men, etc." for which "insult" they were struck by the body guard. It is alleged, too, that Julian had intended to have all the nuns put to death upon his return, but his death allowed the holy women to end their days in peace. 4th century. F. 9 Oct., Rom. Mart.—H. Pudens (Pude, Pudus), the Roman Christian who sent greetings to S. Timothy through S. Paul. Oriental sources claim that he was beheaded with S. Paul, or that he was bishop after S. Peter at Antioch (Schermann, 345). Baring Gould identifies him with Pudens who gave a site for a temple of Neptune at Chichester. (B. G., II, 147). His wife was the British lady Claudia Rufina. At Rome he gave lodging to S. Peter and S. Paul. He is usually confounded with the Senator S. Pudens of the 2nd century. F. 14 Apr., MGr.; 15 Apr., Mz.—Buch.

Pudens (Quintus Cornelius Pudens), a Roman senator, father of Ss. Praxedis, Pudentiana, Novatus, and Timotheus; husband of S. Priscilla. Tradition identifies him with S. Pudens, the disciple of the Apostles. Some hagiographers deny the relation of S. Pudentiana and S. Praxedis to each other and to Pudens and say that the legend was formed after the translation of their relics to the church of S. Prassede under Paschal I. He was buried in the cemetery of S. Priscilla. The term "Ecclesia Pudentiana" means "the church of Pudens (titulus pastoris)," not "the church of S. Pudentiana." S. Pudens belongs to the 2nd century, the age of Pope Pius I. F. 19 May, Rom. Mart., in the church of S. Pudentiana, 20 May dp.; v. Marcus Acilius Glabrio.—Unt. Rom., 117.—H. L.

Pudens (Prudentius), M., at Laodicea; v. S. Theophilus, 27 July.

Pudentiana (Potentiana), a Roman Virgin, of whom nothing is known, except that she died at the age of 16 years, about 160. Her cult has been connected with the "Church of Pudens" ("Ecclesia Pudentiana") and her name "Potentiana" was changed into "Pudentiana." A legend originating after the translation of the relics of S. Potentiana, S. Praxedis, and the senator S. Pudens, under Paschal I (817-824), claims that the two virgins were sisters and daughters of S. Pudens. Parts of her relics are now at S. Pudentiana, others at S. Prassede. The Pudentiana church is celebrated for its splendid 4th century mosaics. F. 19 May, Rom. Mart., simplex in the Latin Church; dp. maj. in S. Prassede. Puelles, Saintes (The Holy Maids), Vv., who, according to a legend, buried the body of S. Saturninus of Toulouse. Driven into exile, they concealed themselves at Manse-Saintes-Puelles, diocese of S. Papoul (now Carcassonne), where they died in peace. 3rd century. F. 17 Oct. dp. at Toulouse; 16 Oct. simpl. at Carcassonne.—P. B.—Mg.

Pulcheria, V., Byzantine Empress, 414-453, a most influential opponent of Nestorianism and Monophysitism. B. 19 Jan., 399, as the eldest daughter of Emperor Arcadius. 4 July, 414, she was proclaimed "Augusta" and regent for her minor brother Theodosius II, a weakling. She made a vow of virginity and persuaded his sisters to do the same. The imperial palace thus became almost a monastery. Pulcheria always had a powerful position at court, which she used in behalf of the orthodox faith. The final acknowledgment of the condemnation of Nestorius by the Emperor was largely due to her. At the Emperor's death, 28 July, 450, she was proclaimed Empress and then married the able general Marcian, under the condition that her vow of virginity should be respected. She corresponded with Pope Leo I and took an active interest in the affairs of the councils of Ephesus and Chalcedon. She built three churches at Constantinople in honor of the Mother of God and had the relics of S. John Chrysostom brought back to that city. This led to the reconciliation with the Church of the schismatic party of the Johannines. The Ecumenical Council of Chalcedon salutes Pulcheria as "Guardian of the Faith, Maker of Peace, pious, orthodox, and a second S. Helena." D. in July, 453. F. 10 Sept., Rom. Mart.; formerly in many dioceses, 7 July. dp.; in the Greek Church, 7 Aug., full office, and again, with Marcianus, 17 Feb. She is minor patroness of Acquaviva Abbey.—C. E.—Buch.—W. W.—F. J.

Quintinus, M. He was a native of Villeparisis (Seine-et-Marne) and an employee of one Gontran, either the king (561-593), or Gontran Boson, general of King Sigisbert (561-575). The wife of Gontran tried to seduce him, but when she found in him another Joseph, she had him assassinated, at L'Indrois, near Montresor. Thus S. Quintin obtained the double crown of martyrdom and of chastity. In 1238, one of his arms was brought to the cathedral of Meaux. F. 4 Oct., Rom. Mart.; dp. at Tours, 15 Oct.—P. B.

Quintinus (Quentin), M. He was a Roman by birth and accompanied S. Lucien as a missionary to Gaul. He evangelized the pagans around Amiens. First he was tried at Amiens, by the Prefect Rictiovarus, under Diocletian. Then he was tortured at Augusta Vermanduorum, and, finally, beheaded. His "acts," a tale of tortures and miraculous deliverances, are worthless, but his cult is ancient and his existence is firmly established. Amongst unusual tortures the acts relate that two iron spits were run through him from head to foot and two iron nails were driven through his hands. When his head was struck off, a white dove issued from his severed throat and flew to heaven (286). His body was flung into the Somme and remained 55 years under water, until a lady named Eusebia recovered it, having been instructed by an angel where to find it. She built an oratory to receive it, and this formed the nucleus of the town of Saint-Quentin. In 641 S. Eligius elevated his relics (3 Jan.); in 881 they were transferred to Li6on, to save them from the Norsemen, but restored in 890. S. Quentin is patron of the Vermandois. The Breviary of S. Quentin (1642) registers six feasts: 31 Oct., his passion (303), dp. 1 cl. oct.; 23 June, Finding of his relics by S. Eusebia, in 358; 3 Jan., Elevation by S. Eloy, in 641; 12 Jan. Entombment of Ss. Quentin, Victoria, and Cassian; 25 Oct., Tr. rel., in 835; 2 May. Elevation, in 1228. At Alliste, diocese of Nard6 in Apulia, on the first Sunday of May. Finding of S. Quintino. Quirinus of Neuss, M., under Hadrian. According to the romance called "Passion of S. Alexander" (3 May), Quirinus was a tribune and jailer of Pope Alexander, and was converted with his daughter, S. Balbina. The legend ascribes to him the translation of the chains of S. Peter from Jerusalem to Rome. He was martyred shortly before Alexander, Eventius, Theodulus, Hermes, and Theodora, and buried in the cemetery of Praetextatus. Pope Leo IX, in 1050, donated his relics to his sister Gepa, abbess of Neuss, where his church is one of the best monuments of the Romanesque style on the Rhine. He is princ. patron of Neuss. F. 30 April, Rom. Mart.; 30 March dp. at Cologne. He is minor patron of the city of Orte in Umbria, dp. maj. (30 March)—H. L.—R. Sott., 93.

Quirinus (Cyrinus), M., Bp. of Siscia (Sissek in Croatia, Jugo-Slavia). His "acts" are genuine. He was a victim of the persecution under Diocletian. Amantius, prefect of Pannonia Prima, had him drowned with a millstone tied to his neck, 4 June, 309, at Sabaria (Steinamanger, Sarvar on the Raab). A later apocryphal legend says he was a son of Emp. Philip Arabs, like S. Quirinus of Tegnernsee. His relics were transferred to Sissek. When, many years later (5th century), the Latin inhabitants of Sissek had to forsake their homes on account of the invasion of the barbarians, and came as refugees in considerable numbers to Rome, they brought with them the relics of their martyred Bishop, S. Quirinus. They were deposited at the Platonía of the Apostles on the Via Appia (S. Sebastiano). F. 4 June, dp. 1 cl. oct. (princ. patron) in the diocese of Veglia; also in the Republic of S. Marino (princ. patr.); dp. 1 cl. at Sebenico; dp. maj. at Vienna (minor patron); dp. all over Croatia and Bosnia.—Ruin., 522.—H. L.—P. B.

Quirinus, M., reputed companion of S. Nicasius of Rouen, killed at Scannis, diocese of Evreux, probably by Vandals, in 407.

No trustworthy historical account of him exists. His relics were brought to Malmédy, at the beginning of the 9th century. F. 11 Oct.—P. B.

Quirion, Secundus (Secundinus), and Eno, Mm., at Rome. (M. Hier. c. 262). They seem to belong to the forty martyrs who died under Gallienus, about 262, and were buried on the Labican Road.—Rom. Mart.—P. B. (v. S. Eno).

Quiteria, V., M., in Gascony. She is unknown to Christian antiquity. Her "acts" are taken from the story of Queen Calisia, the wife of King Catillias, who bore nine daughters at one birth. These nine virgins suffered martyrdom at different places; one of them is the famous S. Liberata-Wilgefortis. Because Quiteria refused to marry, she fled from home and was killed by emissaries of her father, near Aire in Gascony. The most we can say is that a S. Quiteria certainly flourished in an early century on the borders of France and Spain; if, in a time of persecution, she in any way attracted attention, it is highly probable that she ended her life by martyrdom. Her alleged relics are in the Gallo-Roman crypt of Mas-d'Aire. They were destroyed during the French revolution. S. Quiteria is highly venerated in Gascony and the North of Spain. F. 22 May, dp. at Bordeaux, Auch, Toledo, Braga, Aire, Dax, Périgueux, etc. The Portuguese claim that she suffered martyrdom at Pombeiro Interamnense, that she was a native of Braga, and that she and her sisters were the first martyrs of the Spanish peninsula.—L. Quodvultdeus, C., Bp. of Carthage, about 437. When, in 439, the Arian King Geiseric captured the city, he took away Catholic churches, confiscated the property of the rich, and sent them into exile. The bishop with many of his clergy was deported and despoiled of all his goods. A favorable wind carried him and his companions to the coast of Italy. They landed at Naples, employed themselves to the best of their ability in ministering to the spiritual needs of the population, like many other deported African bishops and priests, and impressed all who witnessed their patient endurance of adversity so favorably that, after they had passed away, they were universally acclaimed as saints. Quodvultdeus died at Naples, about 450. F. at Naples and Carthage, dp. 26 Oct.; also in the Rom. Mart. (now 19 Feb. dp.)—Comm.—Rams.

Rabulas, abbot, C.; b. at Samosata in Syria, in 450; he was educated by S. Barypsabas. After having led a solitary life for a while, he built a monastery near Beirut and, assisted by Emperor Anastasius, another one at Constantinople, where he died about 530. F. 19 Feb., MGr., Mz.

Rabulas (Rabbula), of Ken-neshrin (Alep), Bp. of Edessa; b. at Chalcis of a pagan father and a Christian mother. After his conversion he became a friend and admirer of Theodore of Mopsvestia and was appointed bishop of Edessa in 412. At first he opposed S. Cyril, at the Council of Ephesus, but later on became his most uncompromising ally against Nestorianism and publicly burned the writings of Theodore of Mopsvestia. He formulated the canon law of the Syrian Church. Later in life he may have been a Monophysite. D. 8 Aug., 435. F. 17 Dec., 2 cl. in the Syrian Church; also Wednesday after 2nd Sunday after Easter, 8 Aug.—Rb. Sl.—Nill., I, 466.—Fort., 75.—Jac., 286 (7 Aug.).—Wr., 47.

Rachildis (B.), V.; b. in the Frickthal, Aargau, Switzerland; she was a relative of Count Ekkehard I and S. Wiborada. In 920, she was walled up in a cell near that of S. Wiborada. During the invasion of the Hungarians she remained unhurt, whilst S. Wiborada was killed. She died after a long sickness, in 946. F. 3 Nov., popular cult.—H. L.—F. J.

Racho, Bp., C. He had two feasts at Autun: 28 Jan. and 5 Dec. His relics were brought to the Cathedral of Autun, 2 April, 1550. He may be identical with S. Ragnachar of Basle-Augst. (Bishops of Basle).

Radbod, C., Bp. of Utrecht, Holland. By his mother he was a descendant of the famous pagan prince Radbod of Frisia and a nephew of Gunther, Archbishop of Cologne, with whom he made his home until 863, when Gunther was deposed. Then he visited the court school, under Charles the Bald, and studied philosophy at Tours. In 899, he was elected bishop of Utrecht, but removed the see to Deventer during the Danish invasion. He composed a number of poems and liturgical offices (hymns on S. Martin and S. Suitbert). D. 29 Nov., 918, at Deventer, where he was elected patron. F. at Utrecht, 29 Nov. dp.; Tr.

Radegundis, V., adopted daughter of S. Bathildis and nun at Chelles; she is said to have died on the same day as S. Bathildis, in 685 (680?). F. 29 Jan. (3 Feb.)—P. B.

Radegundis (Aragone or Liberata) and Olivia, V., Mm., at Piscine-sous-Chaumont, Bassigny, France. They died defending their honor against the Huns. During the revolution (1789) the relics of S. Radegonde were brought to Clairvaux; in 1802 they were sent back to Motherie. F. 3 Febr. P. B.

Radegundis, Queen. B. in 518, at Erfurt, daughter of King Berthachar of Thuringia. After the annihilation of the Thuringian tribal kingdom by Theodebert (Battle on the Unstrut), she was brought as a hostage to the Neustrian villa Athies, by Chlotar I, in 531, when only twelve years old. There she was educated in domestic science and learned to read the Fathers and poets. About 540, Chlotar compelled her to become his wife. She was given to works of charity and piety ("more nun than queen"). When her brother Chlotachar had been killed by order of her coarse and faithless husband (550), she fled to S. Medardus of Noyon, who gave her a nun's veil. After various pilgrimages to Frankish monasteries and shrines, with Chlotar's assistance, she founded the nunnery of the Holy Cross near Poitiers, to which she gave the rule of S. Caesarius of Arles, and her adopted daughter Agnes as abbess. She spent 30 years there in prayer, study, penance, and charity. From Emperor Justin II she obtained a relic of the Holy Cross, in honor of which S. Venantius Fortunatus composed his hymn "Vexilla Regis." D. 13 Aug., 587. Her body was burnt by the Calvinists in 1562. F. 13 Aug. Rom. Mart.; in the city of Poitiers (principal patroness) dp. 1 cl. oct. Ratho (Rasso, Rapoto, Rath), C., count of Andechs. B. at Diessen, in 900, a son of count Rathold of Andechs. Having twice conquered the Huns, he made a pilgrimage to Palestine, from where he brought many relics, which form the basis of the rich treasure of Andechs. At the foot of the castle he founded Werden monastery and died there, 19 June, 953. Werden was destroyed one year after Ratho's death. The bones of Ratho were elevated at "Graf-Rath," in 1486 and 1695. His tomb is a famous shrine; he is titular of the church of Grafath, and patron against hernia and bladder-stone. Ravennus and Rasiphus, Mm. Ravennus was a priest, Rasiphus a deacon; both were natives of Britain; at the period of the Anglo-Saxon invasion they fled to the woods of Macé, near Séez, in Normandy, where they lived as hermits in poverty and prayer. They were killed by order of the governor of Neustria. Their relics were brought to S. Vedast, near Bayeux; in the 11th century to the cathedral of Bayeux; they were destroyed in 1562. These martyrs are for the first time found in the Auctuarium of Grevenus of Usuard, of 1521. Perhaps Rasiphus is the Roman martyr of this name. Ravennus may be the city of Ravenna, the home of the principal saint of July 23, S. Apollinaris. The legend may have been invented for the bodies of nameless saints found in S. Vaast near Bayeux. Raymund (Ramon) of Peñafort, C., O. P., canonist. B. about 1175, in Peñafort castle (Vilafranca de Benadis), in Catalonia. He was a kinsman of the kings of Aragon. He studied and taught at Barcelona. In 1210, he went to Bologna to perfect himself in the study of the law. There he obtained the degree of "Doctor Decretorum." In 1219, he was appointed archdeacon of Barcelona, where he took the habit of S. Dominic, in 1222. He was professor in the monastery school, 1223-1229, at the same time preaching against the Moors, Waldenses, and Albigenses. He persuaded King James to introduce the Inquisition into Aragon. With S. Peter of Nolasque he cooperated in founding the Order of Our Lady of Ransom, in 1223, and composed its Constitutions. Called to Rome by Gregory IX, he was chosen penitentiary and confessor to the Pope and entrusted with the new edition of the Decretalia (finished 1234). From 1238 to 1240 he was General of his Order. As such he was highly praised for the reorganization of its Constitutions. He also founded study houses for Oriental languages at Barcelona and Tunis in order to more effectively convert the Saracens. After two years he resigned and retired to Spain, but refused the archbishopric of Tarragona. From 1234 to 1244 he wrote his "Summa de Poenitentia et Matrimonio," a manual for moralists and canonists. His collection of canons remained an authoritative text-book until the promulgation of the new Code, in 1917. D. 6 Jan., 1275, at Barcelona. He was canonized 29 Apr., 1601. F. (Rom. Raymund (Ramon) "the Unborn" (Non-natus), C., O. Merc., Cardinal. His "Life" is unreliable. B. in 1204, at Portello in Catalonia, of a noble, but poor family, he was cut out of the womb of his deceased mother, hence his surname. He joined the newly founded Order of Our Lady of Ransom at Barcelona. Full of zeal for the redemption of captives in Africa, he gave himself in ransom and languished in prison, where he endured terrible hardships until his Order succeeded in ransoming him. A legend claims that his lips were pierced with red hot iron and closed with a padlock, to keep him from preaching. He was created Cardinal in 1239, and called to Rome by Gregory IX, but died on the way. 31 Aug., about 1240, at Cardona (Cerdagne) in Catalonia. His relics are in the chapel of S. Nicholas at Portello. His name was put in the Rom. Mart. in 1657. F. 31 Aug. dp. in the Latin Church (since 3 Aug., 1669): dp. 2 cl. O. Merced. and at Barcelona. Raymund (Ramon) Lull (B.), "Doctor Illuminatus," M., O. F. M. Born about 1232, at Palma, Mallorca, of an illustrious family. Married when young, he led a gay life as Grand Seneschal at the court of King James the Conqueror. Converted by an apparition, he returned to Mallorca and resolved to devote himself to the conversion of the Moors in Northern Africa. Having studied Arabic, and made preparatory journeys to Italy, France, and England, he crossed over to Africa, in 1291, and disputed with the Saracen scholars at Tunis. Because he preached Christ in the Bazaar, he was deported to Naples. After having vainly tried to interest Pope Boniface VIII in the study of Oriental languages, he taught metaphysics in Paris, then tried to inaugurate missionary work in Cyprus, Egypt, and Armenia. In 1307, he was again deported from Tunis. In 1311, he tried to advance the study of Oriental languages and his scheme for the conversion of the Saracens before the Council of Vienne.

In an effort to push his work single-handed, he returned to Tunis, was stoned there, 29 June, 1315, and died, 30 June, on shipboard, near Cabrera island. His body is in the cathedral of Palma. F. 3 July, dp. in Majorca and Minorca, sem. O. F. M., 27 Nov., O. M. Conv. simpl. He became a Franciscan Tertiary in 1266. He was celebrated as a chemist, an alchemist, a philosopher, a theologian, and a poet.—C. E.—W.W.—Buch.—Auss.

Raymund of Capua (B.), C., O. P., 23d General of the Dominican Order, reformer and hagiographer. B. at Capua, of the noble family delle Vigne. From 1358 to 1362 he was professor at Rome and Bologna. In 1367 he became prior at Rome. In 1374 professor at Siena and guide of S. Catherine. In 1378, he was Legate of Urban VI to King Charles of France. On 1379, he became superior of the Lombard province; as such he restored the observance of the stricter rule in Upper Italy and Germany (Urbanist reform). D. 5 Oct., 1399, at Nuremberg in Bavaria. Beatified, 15 May, 1899. His relics are in the church of S. Domenico, Naples. F. 5 Oct. at Capua and Siena. dp.—Ord., II., 120.—Seeb., 561.—Dom., 279.—Prych., 86.

Regius, M., of the Ursuline cycle. F. 18 June; Elev. rel. at Ss. John and Cordula, Cologne.—Gel.

Regula, V., M., at Zurich; v. S. Felix, 11 Sept.

Regulinda (Reginlinda), matron; mother of S. Adalric of Einsiedeln, wife of the Suabian dukes Burkhard I (d. 926) and Herman (d. 948), abbess of Ss. Felix and Regula at Zurich. She died of leprosy on the isle of Ufnau, in 959. A chapel is dedicated to her on Ufnau. Her relics were found at Einsiedeln, in 1720. F. 8 Aug. at Einsiedeln.—H. L.

Regulus = S. Riagail.

Regulus (Rule), Bp., C. According to his fabulous "Life," he was custodian of the relics of S. Andrew at Patras, Greece, when Emperor Constantius took these relics to Constantinople. He brought an arm-bone and three fingers of the Apostle to pagan Scotland, where he founded the church of S. Andrew's, 4th century. Several churches are dedicated to him in Scotland. He is identical with S. Regulus (or Rhiaghail), an Irish contemporary of S. Canice, and abbot of Muicinich in Lough Derg, who died at Kil-Rigmond (S. Andrew's), Scotland, in 788. He brought the relics of S. Andrew in 761. The church of S. Andrew's was erected in 763. F. in the Aberdeen Brev., 30 March and 17 Oct.—Moran, 199.—O'H., III, 1021.—Barr., 138.

Regulus (Rieule), C., Bp. of Senlis. He is said to have been born at Argos, Greece, or at Ephesus. His apocryphal "acts" make him a contemporary of S. Denis of Paris; other sources say that he lived under Diocletian. The French believe that he was the second bishop of Arles, the second bishop of Paris, and the first bishop of Senlis. Probably S. Regulus of Arles is not identical with the saint of Senlis. He is patron of the city and diocese of Senlis, where these feasts were formerly kept: 30 Apr. (Rom. Mart.) dp. 1 cl. oct; 23 Apr. Tr. rel.; 7 Feb and 13 July, F. of his miracles. F. now at Beauvais, 30 Apr. dp. 2 cl.; dp. at Arles; Tr. rel., 30 March at Senlis (1776).—Ch. Leg., 155.—P. B.—Mg.—H. L.

Regulus (Reghuil), abbot of Bangor, Down; d. in 881. F. 11 June.—O'H., VI, 622.

Regulus, Bp., M. He was one of the 220 African bishops who were driven away by the Vandals under King Thrasamund, 496-523. With Ss. Cerbonius and Felix he sailed to Tuscany and came to Populonia (Piombino), where he lived as a hermit for many years. Refusing to comply with the order of the Ostrogoth King Totilas to appear before him, he was beheaded, 1 Sept., 542. S. Cerbonius buried him. Bishop John of Lucca, (d. 803) brought his relics from Ponte Serchio to the cathedral of Lucca. F. 1 Sept., Rom. Mart., dp. maj. (Pmp.) at Lucca, sem. in the prov. of Algiers.—H. L.—P. B.

Regulus (Réol, Rieul), 26th Archbishop of Reims; he took the Benedictine habit at Rebais (Meaux) and, in 680, succeeded his uncle, S. Nivard, in the see of Reims. In 680 he founded Orbais monastery; d. in 698. His relics are at Orbais. F. 25 Nov., Rom. Mart.; 3 Sept. dp. at Reims.—P. B.—Mg.

Reimbert = S. Rembert.

Reinaldus (Regius, Raynald), Bp., M., of the spurious Ursuline cycle. His relics were elevated at Ss. John and Cordula, Cologne, in 1327. F. 18 June. He is identical with S. Regius. Gel.

Reineldis (Raineldis) de Contich, V., M., in Brabant, 7th century. According to her legendary "Life" (11th century), she was a daughter of Count Witger of Lorraine and of S. Amalberga, a sister of S. Gudule. She took the veil with her mother and sister and performed works of piety and charity at Saintes, near Hal (Brabant). After an alleged pilgrimage to Palestine (from which she is said to have returned with relics after seven years), she was massacred by the Hungarians, with the subdeacon Grimoald and her servant Gondulf. Her relics at Saintes were elevated in 866. F. 16 July, Rom. Mart.; 21 July at Mechlin and Namur.—P. B.—Mg.—F. J.

Reiner, C., a recluse in a cell near the entrance to the cathedral of Osnabrück; era unknown.—Kr., 375.

Reinhard, first abbot of Reinhausen in Saxony; he had been a monk and director of the school at Stavelot in Belgium; d.

in 1098. He is patron against epilepsy. F. 9 March.—H. L.

Reinhildis, V., a maiden at Westerkapeln in Westphalia, who was killed by her own mother, in 1262.—Kr., 413—Str. G., 208.

Reinold, M., a fabulous saint, the youngest of the so-called "Children of Haimon," of the Carolingian house. He left the world and a promising career in the army and became a monk at S. Pantaleon, Cologne. As such he was a helper of stone-masons, who killed him with their hammers and threw him into the Rhine, about 960. His relics were transferred to Dortmund by Archbishop Anno, about 1059. F., end of the Middle Ages, at Cologne, 7 Jan.; in the church of S. Pantaleon, 23 Jan. (Gel. 373.) at Toledo (Spain), 9 Febr. dp.—H. L.—H. D.

Relindis (Renildis, Renula), V.; b. at the end of the 7th century, in the territory of the modern city of Maaseyck; she was educated, with her sister in the Benedictine nunnery of Valenciennes and became an expert in ecclesiastical embroidery and painting. S. Boniface appointed her abbess of the convent of Eyck, on the River Meuse, founded by her parents. D. 6 Feb. in the beginning of the 8th century. Her relics are at Maaseyck since 1571. F. 6 Feb.—P. B.—Mg.

Relindis, V., at Susteren; v. S. Benedicta, 16 Nov.

Remacle, C., Bp. of Maestricht (Tongern). B. in Gascony, about 602. He was a disciple of S. Sulpicius at Bourges, and was appointed abbot of Solignac by S. Eligius, in 631. After 638, he was at the court of Sigebert III, then a missionary (regional bishop) among the pagans of the Ardennes, where he founded Stavelot and Malmédy, about 648. In 652, he succeeded S. Amand at Maestricht and Tongern, but resigned ten years later and retired to Stavelot. D. 3 Sept., about 670. His relics are at Stavelot. F. 3 Sept. dp. at Liège and Namur simpl. at Cologne; Tr. rel. at Stavelot, 25 June.—P. B.—Mg.

Remacle, a reputed Greek archbishop among the Ursuline martyrs at Cologne. His relics are at Ss. John and Cordula. F. 3 Sept., Ss. John and Cordula, Cologne.

Remassarius (Remezaire, Remissarius), C., Bp. of Nîmes, Languedoc; he was present at the synod of Toledo, in 633. F. 1 March. P. B.

Rembert (Reimbert), Archbishop of Bremen-Hamburg, C. Born at Tourhout (Turholt) in Flanders; he was educated at the monastery which S. Anskar had founded at Tourhout. He followed S. Anskar on his missionary journeys and was elected his successor, in 865. He received the pallium from Pope Nicolas I. Immediately after his consecration he took the Benedictine habit at Corvey; he preached the Gospel in Eastern Frisia, Denmark, and Sweden, also in Brandenburg and took part in the synod of Worms, in 868. To him we owe a well-written life of S. Anskar. D. at Bremen, 11 June. 888. F. 4 Feb., Rom. Mart. Before the Reformation his F. was celebrated at Bremen, Hamburg, and Ratzeburg, 11 June: Elevation of his relics at Bremen, 4 Feb.; at Lund, 9 March.—H. L.—H. D.

Remedius (Ramezy), C., Bp. of Gap, France. His era is uncertain, he may have succeeded S. Tigris. His relics, with those of S. Germanus of Constantinople, were brought by French knights to Bort, diocese of Tulle. F. 3 Feb., Rom. Mart.—Comm.—P. B.

Remigius (Remi), C., Bp. of Rouen; he was a son of Charles Martel and was nominated bishop of Rouen, in 755. In 760, he was engaged in a political mission to the court of Desiderius, king of the Lombards, and at Rome; he worked for the introduction of the Roman rite and the Roman chant into Gaul. In 765, he was present at a meeting of bishops at Attigny. D. 772. F. 19 Jan. (death); Tr. rel. (from Soissons to S. Ouen, Rouen), 15 May, sem.; 15 May at Rouen.—Comm.—P. B.

Remigius, C., Bp. of Lincoln, England. He had been a monk and almoner at Fécamp. In 1066, he took part in the battle of Hastings and was appointed bishop of Dorchester in 1067. In 1071 and 1076 he accompanied Lanfranc to Rome. In 1085, he removed his residence to Lincoln, where he built a new cathedral. D. 7 May, 1092. F. 7 May.—Sl.—Angl.—L. S.

Remigius (Remi), C., Bp. of Reims. B. in 437, at Cerny-en-Laonnais, of a noble Gallo-Roman family; his mother was S. Celinia, his brother S. Principius, Bishop of Soissons, his nurse S. Balsamia. At the age of 22 years, when still a layman, he was elected bishop of Reims, in 459; he was active in spreading the Catholic faith amongst the pagans and Arians of his diocese; his influence decided the conversion of King Clovis I, upon whom he conferred baptism at Reims on Easter eve, 496. The legend of the miraculous chrism-vial was formed in the 9th century ("Life of S. Remi," written by Hincmar) and is a reminiscence of the Celtic legend of the Holy Grail. The letter of Pope Hormisdas appointing Remigius papal vicar for Gaul, is a falsification. D. at Reims, 13 Jan., 535. His relics were elevated, 1 Oct., 1049, by Leo IX. They are now in the abbey church of S. Remi, Reims. F. 1 Oct., Rom. Mart., simpl. in the Latin Church; dp.

maj. all over France and at Turin (Pmp.). At Reims, 14 Jan. (princ. patron), dp. 1 cl. oct.; at Soissons and Reims, F. 1 Oct., dp. 2 cl.—L. S.—C. E.—W.W.—Buch.—P. B.—Mg.

Remigius, Archbishop of Lyons. He had been chief chaplain at the court of King Charles of Provence, and was elected archbishop of Lyons in 852. He took part in many synods and was a leader in the controversy against Gottschalk's doctrine on predestination. He had a heated discussion with Hincmar of Reims on the same subject. D. 28 Oct., 875. F. 29 Oct. dp. at Lyons.—P. B.—Mg.

Remigius (B.), Bp. of Strasbourg, C. He was a son of Duke Hugh of Alsace and a nephew of S. Odilia; was educated at Münster near Colmar, where he was elected abbot. In 776, he was chosen bishop of Strasbourg. He brought the relics of S. Sophia and her daughters to Eschau. D. 29 March, 783, and was buried at Eschau. F. 20 March at Münster, by privilege of Leo IX.—H. L.—Mg.

Remo = S. Romulus, Bp. of Genoa, 13 Oct.

Remy = S. Remigius.

Renan = S. Ronan.

Renatus, C., Bp. of Sorrento; he was elected under the pontificate of Boniface I; d. in 422. Towards the end of his career, he led a solitary life. The tradition of Sorrento erroneously identifies him with S. Renatus of Angers. He is one of the minor patrons of Sorrento. F. 6 Oct. dp. maj.; Tr. rel. dp. 13 March.—H. L.—Off. pr Renatus (Réné), Bp. of Angers; b. at Possonnière, diocese of Angers, and educated at Angers. He was appointed archdeacon of Angers and administrator of Chalonnès. In 426, he was elected bishop of Angers. That he retired to a solitude near Sorrento and was elected bishop there, leaving his own diocese, is very improbable, although both at Angers and at Sorrento the two saints are identified. F. 12 Nov. 2 cl. at Angers; Tr. rel. 12 Apr. dp. maj.—P. B.—Mg.

Renildis = S. Relindis.

Renon = S. Ragnulf.

Renovatus, C., Bp. of Merida in Spain; he had been abbot of Cauliana, where he converted "a gluttonous monk." Of his episcopate nothing is known. D. about 633 and is buried in the church of S. Eulalia at Merida. F. 31 March, Spanish Mart.—H. L.

Renula = S. Relindis.

Renus, M., at Carthage; v. S. Montanus, 24 Feb.

Reol = S. Regulus of Reims, 3 Sept.

Reparata, V., M. According to her legend

she suffered martyrdom under Decius (251) at Caesarea in Palestine. After having endured terrible tortures, according to her spurious acts, she was beheaded. Bystanders asserted that at the moment of her death they saw a white dove fly upward from her headless trunk. Her relics, later on, may, at least partly, have come to Teano near Naples. F. 8 Oct., Rom. Mart.; dp. at Jerusalem (Latin). She is titular of the cathedrals of Pisa and Nizza, co-titular of the cathedrals of Florence and Lucca (2 cl.), minor patron in the dioceses of Teano and Piperno.—P. B.—H. L.

Reparata, V., M., Patroness of the diocese, of Atri, Italy. The Jesuit General Claudius Acquaviva received her body from Pius V and sent it to Atri, where she was elected patroness of the city and diocese. She seems to be a Roman martyr. Her feast was assigned to Oct. 8, because the feast of a homonymous Oriental saint was kept on that day. F. 8 Oct. dp. 1 cl. oct.; Tr. rel. 29 July, dp. maj. F. of her Patronage, Monday after Low Sunday, dp. maj.

Rephaire = S. Rumpharius.

Resignatus (Renatus), C., Bp. of Maestricht; his era is unknown. F. 1 Dec.—P. B.

Respectatus, M., in Africa, 20 July.—P. B.

Respicius, a martyr of an unknown period. Since the 11th century, in the Western Church, he has been connected with S. Tryphon, either as companion (goose-herd), or as a pagan centurion who was converted during the martyrdom of S. Tryphon. He is unknown in the Orient. F. 10 Nov. simpl. in the Latin Church.—H. L.

Responsa, V., M., of the apocryphal Ursuline cycle. F. 23 April in the convent of S. Antony de Alcaccer, Portugal.—A. S.

Restaces = S. Aristakes, 1 Dec.

Restituta, M., at Cagliari, Sardinia, under Commodus (180-192). F. 11 Feb.—H. L.

Restituta, M., at Abitene in proconsular Africa; v. S. Saturninus, 11 Feb.

Restituta, V., M., under Valerianus. She was born at Ponizara in Africa; having been tortured at Carthage, according to a legend, she was killed by fire. She was put on board a boat loaded with combustibles, which, when afloat, was set on fire. God's providence allowed what remained of the boat to drift to the coast of Italy, the relics of S. Restituta being still recognisable. Her body was brought to the isle of Ischia, from there, in the 4th century, to the new cathedral of Naples, which was dedicated to her (the old church is now a venerable side chapel to the cathedral). F. 17 May, Rom. Mart., dp. at Naples; dp. 1 cl. oct. in the small basilica in the cathedral of Naples; Finding of her relics, 3 March dp.; also in prov. of Algiers, dp. 17 May.—H. L.—Rams.

Restituta, V., M., under Aurelianus. She was born at Rome. During the persecution she fled to Sora, where by her prayers she healed a widow's son, Cyrillus, of elephantiasis, and thereby converted many. After torture, she was beheaded with S. Cyrillus, on Cornelli River, near Sora, 27 May, 272. Her "acts" are spurious. F. 27 May, Rom. Rhabanus (Magnentius Rhabanus Maurus), abbot of Fulda, Archbishop of Mayence. B. at Mayence (Mainz) about 784. As a boy he was sent to the cloistral school of Fulda. Later he became a disciple of Alcuin at Tours. In 803, he was director of the school of Fulda. He was ordained deacon in 801, priest in 814, and, at last, chosen abbot of Fulda, in 822; after he had managed his charge strenuously for 20 years, he voluntarily resigned, retired to Mount S. Peter, and shortly afterwards was elected archbishop of Mayence (cons. 26 June, 847). He held three provincial synods: in 847 and 852 for the reform of discipline, in 848 against Gottschalk. D. at Vincellum (Winkel), near Mayence, 4 Feb., 856. He was a mystical interpreter of Holy Scripture, a voluminous writer, and one of the most learned men of his age. His relics were lost at Halle during the Reformation. F. 4 Feb. dp. at Mayence, Limburg, and Breslau; dp. 2 cl. at Fulda.—C. E.—W.W.—H. D.—Buch.

Rhain Dremrudd (Rhun, Rohun), son of S. Brychan and successor of his father as king of Brecon, Wales. His tomb is at Llandevaliog, Brecon. One account says that he fell fighting against the Saxons, with his brother Rhawin, in the 5th century.—B. G., IV, 108.

Richard, a boy M., who was killed by some fanatical Jews after the most exquisite tortures, at Paris, in 1180. F. 25 March.—H. L.

Richard de Wych, Bp., C. Born at Droitwich, Worcestershire, in 1197; after having managed and restored the family estate, he studied at Oxford, Paris, and Bologna. Returning to England, in 1235, he was chosen chancellor of Oxford University and, shortly after, diocesan chancellor and chief advisor to Archbishop S. Edmund of Canterbury. He followed S. Edmund into exile and was with him at Soissy when he died. He then took up the study of theology at Orléans and was ordained to the priesthood. After having been chancellor to S. Boniface of Savoy, Archbishop of Canterbury, he was elected bishop of Chichester, in 1244. But Henry III withheld the confirmation for two years. S. Richard was consecrated by Innocent IV at Lyons and sent back to England. Then Henry refused to surrender the revenues, until he was forced by the Pope's threat, in 1246. D. at Dover in the Maison Dieu, 3 Apr., 1253, whilst preaching the crusade. He was buried at Chichester, where his relics were elevated, 16 June, 1262, in the year of his canonization. Richard Scrope, Bp., M.; b. in 1350 of a noble English family, he was ordained in 1377 and chosen chancellor of Cambridge University, in 1278. Having been auditor at the papal curia, he was consecrated bishop of Coventry and Litchfield by Urban VI. In 1398, King Richard II made him archbishop of York. He remained faithful to the deposed king (1399), excommunicated Henry IV. and led an army against him, but was captured and beheaded at Pontefract castle, 18 June, 1405. He was a learned and ascetic man of spotless character and was venerated by the people as a saint.—H. L.—St.

Richard, C.; his relics are venerated at Tortona. F. 9 Aug.—O.

Richard (Riccardo), Bp., C., principal patron of Andria in Apulia. He probably was a native of England. The apocryphal tradition of Andria relates: When Attila ravaged the north of Italy, Richard came from Rome to Andria (453), was elected bishop and took part in the dedication of S. Michael's sanctuary on Mt. Gargano. It is more probable, however, that he was the Richard who, in 1167, elevated the relics of Ss. Maurus, Sergius, and Pantaleon, and, 3 Apr., 1196, brought those of Ss. Erasmus and Pontianus from Civitella to Andria. He was present at the 3rd Lateran Council, in 1179. D. in 1200. F. 9 June, Rom. Rita (Margarita) de Cascia, Widow; O. S. A.; b. at Rocca Porena, diocese of Spoleto. The first half of her life was hard and bitter. She was married to a rude man, who died a violent death. She was mother of two boys, who swore vengeance upon the murderers. Upon her prayer God took them from this world, fully reconciled to Him. With her husband and children dead, Rita gave all she had to the poor and sought the religious life. She took the veil in the Augustinian nunnery at Cascia, where by continued entreaties she had gained admission. By mortification and prayer she attained great sanctity and mystical gifts. Some folklore from the valley of Spoleto has been embodied in her "Life." D. 22 May, 1457, at Cascia. The Spaniards call her "Abogada de Imposibles" (the saint of desperate cases). Her cult was approved in 1627; she was canonized, 24 May, 1900. Roses are blessed on her feast. F. 22 May, Rom. Mart.; O. S. A., dp. 2 cl. Robert, abbot, O. S. B., at Syracuse, about 800. F. 25 Apr., at Syracuse, now sem. 23 Apr.—H. L.

Robert, C., founder of Cîteaux. B. in 1027, of a noble family in the Champagne. He joined the Benedictines at Moûtier-la-Celle, in the diocese of Troyes, where he was chosen prior. After 1060 he was elected abbot of Saint-Michel-de-Tonnerre, but resigned and returned to Moûtier. Soon after he was again chosen prior at Saint-Ayoul and, in 1074, superior of a new eremitic establishment at Colan, which he removed to Molesme, diocese of Langres, in 1075. Under the mild rule of the kindly abbot the new monastery prospered, but soon the discipline relaxed, because Robert had received unsuitable candidates. He left Molesme and founded a reformed monastery in a swampy plain in Burgundy, which was later called Cistercium (Cîteaux). The following year (1099) he returned to Molesme, leaving the new foundation to S. Alberic. He died at Molesme, 21 March, 1110, and was canonized, 8 Jan., 1222. He did not intend to found a new order, although his monastery led to the establishment of the Cistercian Order under Alberic, Stephen, and Bernard. F. 29 Apr., Rom. Mart.; dp. 2 cl., O. Cist.; at Dijon, dp. maj.—P. B.—Ord., I.

Robert, abbot of Newminster, C.; b. at Graven, Yorkshire. He was a parish priest at Gargrave, took the Benedictine habit at Whitby, but, in 1132, joined the Cistercian community at Fountains, diocese of York. On 6 Jan., 1139, he received the benediction as abbot of Newminster (Morpeth), where he died, 7 June, 1159. He was favored with the gift of prophecy and wrought many miracles. His tomb at Newminster (Northumberland) was a place of pilgrimage. F. 7 June dp. O. Cist.—St.—L. S.

Robert Flower of Knaresborough, hermit. His father had been mayor of York. After he was ordained subdeacon, Robert repaired to Knaresborough, from there, after one year, to Spofforth in Northumberland; then to the Benedictine priory of Hedley. At last he returned to his chapel at Knaresborough, where he led an austere life. D. 24 Sept., 1218. His cult was never formally approved, but he was venerated at Knaresborough, 24 Sept.—L. S.—Rams.

Robert (B.), C., O. SS. Trin., hermit at Kendall, Westmoreland. Clement IV approved his cult for the English Trinitarians. F. 22 Feb.—St.

Robert of Arbissel (B.), abbot and founder of the Order of Fontevault, O. S. B.; b. at Arbissel, Brittany (Bretagne), in 1057; son of a married priest; he studied at Paris; was archpriest at Rennes, then at Angers; in 1095, he retired into the forest of Craon, preaching penance. In 1096, he founded the monastery of S. Maria de Rota. Appointed Apostolic missionary by Pope Urban II, he evangelized Western France. For his numerous converts he founded the monastic colony of Fontevault, near the town of Caudé, with separate houses for men and women and a settlement for lepers. Soon many other priories arose all over France. He finished the organization of his Congregation in 1116. The head of the Order was the Abbess of Fontevault ("Son, see thy Mother;" John XIX, 27). D. at Orsan (Berry), 25 Feb., 1117. His canonization could not be accomplished on account of some obscure points in the life of this peculiar ascetic. His greatest adversary was Marbod of Rennes. (Lob., II, 350). He is called "the Patriarch of the hermits of France." Cult popular.—Chev.—Ord., 417.—P. B.—Rams.—Biogr.

Robert Gruthuysen (B.), of Bruges, abbot of Clairvaux; b. at Bruges, end of the 11th century. He was a youth of fine literary attainments and superior intelligence, when he attached himself to S. Bernard at Liège, in 1131, and took the habit at Clairvaux. When Abbot Fulco, O. S. B., gave his monastery to the Cistercians, R. was sent to Dunes, West Flanders, as first Cistercian abbot; S. Bernard himself installed him, 5 Apr., 1139. After the death of S. Bernard (1153) Robert was elected his successor at Clairvaux. D. there 29 Apr., 1157.—P. B.

Robert Lawrence (B.), M., a Carthusian priest, prior of Beauvale in Nottingham; he was arrested at the London charterhouse and executed at Tyburn prison, 4 May, 1535.—Seeb., 48.—St.

Robert Salt (B.), M., a Carthusian lay brother; for refusing the supremacy oath, he was left to perish in Newgate prison, after 29 May, 1537.—Seeb., 50.—St.

Robert Johnson (B.), M., a native of Shropshire; he studied at the English College, Douai; after his ordination he was sent back to England in 1576. In 1580, he was imprisoned in the tower for the "Reims and Rome" conspiracy, and hanged and quartered, 28 May, 1582. F. dp. 28 May in the German College at Rome.—St.—Seeh.

Robert (B.), abbot, O. S. B., of Soletto (Salle); b. in 1272; he attached himself to S. Peter Celestine at Murrone, diocese of Solmona, and founded 14 monasteries of the Celestine reform. D. at Murrone, 18 July, 1341. F. 18 July.—H. L.

Robert of Blois (B.), abbot, O. S. B., of Micy, diocese of Orléans. D. in 1011. F. formerly 8 Aug. at Micy and at Saint-Florent-les-Saumur.—P. B.

Robert Bellarmine (B.), C., S. J., Cardinal; b. Oct. 4, 1542, at Montepulciano in Tuscany; he joined the Society of Jesus in 1559. From 1570 to 1576, he taught theology at Louvain, where he was highly celebrated for his Latin sermons. He preached and taught in Rome from 1576 to 1589; in 1592 he was elected rector of the Roman College; in 1595, provincial of Naples. He was created Cardinal March 3, 1598, and chosen archbishop of Capua in 1602, but before his consecration resigned and retired to Rome, where, by his writings he defended the Apostolic See against the arrogance of Venice (Paolo Serpi) and the tyranny of James I of England. He was an excellent controversialist, one of the greatest men of his age, learned, modest and pious, honored by many, hated and calumniated by others. His principal work, "Disputationes de Controversiis Fidei," directed against the Protestants, is justly admired for its clear style, profound erudition, and dispassionate tactics. His Catechism was translated into all European and some Asiatic languages and is still used in Italy. He died in Rome (S. Andrea al Quirinale), Sept. 17, 1621. His relics are at the Gesù church. The process of his beatification was introduced in 1626, but was broken off by the enemies of the great Cardinal under Benedict XIV; it was resumed under Benedict XV and finished May 10, 1923.—Buchb.—C. E.

Robert Malatesta (B.), C., 3rd O. F. M., of the rich and princely house of Malatesta; at the age of 18 years he married a young lady of the house of Este; he joined the third Order of S. Francis and devoted himself to works of piety and charity; he died young, 10 Oct., 1432. Cult not approved.—H. L.

Robert (B.), C., O. P.; b. at Uzès, took his vows a Avignon, and died in 1317. F. 10 Nov.—P. B.

Roc-Amadour = S. Amator of Quercy, 26 Aug.

Rochus, M., at Antwerp; v. S. Symphorianus, 27 Feb.

Rochus (Roche, Roch), C., patron against pestilence. His "Life" is purely legendary. He was a native of Montpellier, France; came to Italy, in 348, when the pestilence was raging there, and nursed the sick and dying at Rome, Acquapendente, and Piacenza, until he was attacked by the plague himself. He was saved from death by a dog, which led its master to the solitary place, where Roch was lying. About 1350, he returned to Montpellier, where he was arrested as a vagrant and a foreign spy and cast into the common jail, where he died from neglect. On removing the body for burial it was discovered that the vagabond was the nephew of the governor of Montpellier. His relics were stolen at Montpellier and taken to Venice A. D. 1478. Arles also claims to possess his body. The Council of Constance approved his cult. It cannot be proved that he belonged to the Third Order of S. Francis. He is patron of physicians, against cholera and pestilence. Paul III instituted the Confraternity of S. Roch. F. 16 Aug., Rom. Mart.; at Montpellier dp. 1 cl.; at Paris in the church of S. Roch: Tr. rel. last Sunday after Pentecost. Feasts of his Patronage are not uncommon in Italy, e.g., at Locorotondo, diocese of Ostuni, 20 Feb. dp. maj.; at Gioiosa, diocese of Gerace, 27 March, dp. maj.—C. E.—W.W.—Buch—P. B.—Biogr.

Rodan (Ruadhan, Rottan), abbot of Lorrha, Tipperary, one of the Twelve Apostles of Ireland. He was a disciple of S. Finian of Clonard and, about 550, founded the house of Lorrha, also Dare-Enech, Bonaghun, etc. With S. Brendan of Clonfert and other saints, he cursed King Diarmaid of Tara for violating the right of sanctuary. D. at Lorrha, in 584. F. 15 Apr.—O'H., IV, 148.

Rodan, Bp. of Kill-Rodan, Sligo; he had been a shepherd and was consecrated by S. Patrick. F. 24 Aug. and 18 Jan.—O'H. VIII, 359.

Romanus, M., Bp. of Nepi; v. S. Ptolemaeus, 24 Aug.

Romanus Melodus (Theorhetor), C., the greatest of Byzantine liturgical poets. B. in Syria, probably towards the end of the 5th century. From Berytos, where he was deacon, he came to Constantinople, under Emperor Anastasius I (491-518), and became a priest at the church of Our Lady in the Blachernae. He is said to have composed 1,000 hymns, of which 80 have come down to us. He opened the classical period of liturgical hymnody. His most celebrated composition is the dramatic Christmas Kon-takion, which was executed with great splendor at Constantinople up to the 12th century. In poetic talent, noble inspiration, depth of feeling, and elevation of language he far surpasses the later Greek hymnographers. Some claim that he lived under Anastasius II (713-716). F. 1 Oct., full office in the Greek Church.—Mrt.—A. B., 13, 440.

Romanus, alleged Bp. and M. of Auxerre; d. about 550. His existence is doubtful; probably he is the abbot Romanus of Fontrouge, whose relics were transferred to Auxerre. F. 6 Oct., Rom. Mart.; 7 Oct. dp. at Sens.—P. B.

Romanus, C., Bp. of Rouen. B. about 561, of a noble Frankish family; he was educated at the palace school of Chlotar II, where he made the acquaintance of Ss. Ouen and Ely. In 630, he was elected bishop of Rouen. He purged his diocese of the remnants of paganism. D. 23 Oct., 639. His relics (transferred in 1179) were burnt by the Calvinists, in 1562. He has been venerated since the 9th century. F. 23 Oct., Rom. Mart.; at Rouen, formerly, 3 Oct., now (since 1762), 3rd Sunday in Oct. dp. 2 cl.—P. B.—Mg.

Romanus, C.; b. at Rome; he was a nephew of S. Julien, the Apostle of Maine. He labored as a priest under S. Pavaeius. F. 7 Nov. sem. at LeMans.—P. B.

Romanus, deacon in Palestine (Caesarea?), M., under Diocletian. He happened to be in Antioch when some Christians were being tried. He exhorted them to constancy and rebuked those who offered sacrifice to the idols. The pagan judge (Galerius?) ordered his tongue cut out, but Romanus miraculously continued to speak and preach. Subjected to the rack, stretched to the fifth hole, he died under torture, 18 Nov., 303. He is one of the most famous martyrs of Antioch. Eusebius and Chrysostom extolled him; Prudentius composed a lengthy hymn in his honor, in which, amongst other converted spectators, appears a boy of 7 years, Barulas. Barulas may be fictitious, or he may be the famous martyr Barlaha (Barlaam). F. 18 Nov., Rom. Mart. In the Syrian, Greek, and Mozarabic churches, full office. His F. in the Middle Ages was kept in most churches; it is now dp. 2 cl. in the church of the Benedictine Nuns de la Rochette, diocese of Lyons. Rb. Sl. commemorates him also on 13 Apr. and 15 March. Quent., 183.—Lins., 194.—Ruin., 392.—Rams.

Romanus de Blaye (or of LeMans), C.; he was a priest who evangelized the pagans at the mouth of the Gironde. D. 24 Nov. at Blaye. He is patron of sailors. F. 24 Nov., Rom. Mart., dp. at Bordeaux.—P. B.—A. B., 5, 177.

Romanus, "the Wonder Worker," C.; b. at Rumana, near Antioch; he lived in a miserable hut, with no fire or light, and wore a heavy iron chain and a rough hair shirt. He possessed the gift of healing the sick. F. 27 Nov.—MGR.

Romanus, M., at Samosata; he hung on the cross for two days and was finally pierced by a spear, in 297. v. S. Hipparchus, 9 Dec.

Romanus Aybara (B.), M., 3rd O. P., father of B. Paul Aybara; he was beheaded at Nagasaki, 8 Sept., 1828. Beatified, 6 July, 1867. F. 1 June dp. O. P.—Jap.

Romanus Matevoca (B.), M., a Japanese layman; b. at Omura of the royal family of Firando; he was beheaded at Nagasaki with 10 companions, 27 Nov., 1619. Beatified, 6 July, 1867.—Jap.—Seeb.

Romard (Romaize, Romadouze), C., at Déols or Bourg-Dieu (Indre), France. F. 25 Aug.—P. B.

Romare (Romaratus), C., a saint at Saint-Savin in Poitou, France. F. 16 Jan.—P. B.

Romarie (Rémiré), abbot, C., a saint of the royal blood of the Merovingians, son of Romulf (a nobleman in the Vosges, who was killed by order of Queen Brunehild), and, after the death of Thierry, was one of the chief men at the court of Chlothar II. He was converted by S. Amat of Luxeuil, and took the habit of S. Columban at Luxeuil, and on his estate on the Moselle River founded the double monastery of Habendum (later on called Remiremont), which he governed after S. Amat. He organized the "Laus perennis" in seven choirs. That Romarie was married and the grandfather of his successor, S. Adelphius, is a legend. D. 8 Dec., 653. He was canonized by S. Leo IX, in 1051. F. 8 Dec., Rom. Mrt., formerly at Remiremont, 8 Dec., now at S. Dié and Nancy, dp. 9 Dec.—P. B.—Mg.

Romuald, abbot, C., founder of the Camaldolese Hermits. B. at Ravenna of the ducal race of the Onesti, about 952 (not 907). Having spent his youth in worldliness and having witnessed the murder of a relative, committed by his father, Sergius, he retired to the Benedictine monastery of S. Apollinare at Classe, near Ravenna, to do penance. There, after some hesitation, he took the religious habit. He committed himself to the guidance of an austere hermit, Marinus, in 975. For some time he and Marinus sojourned at Cuxa in Catalonia, (Spain), where they assisted the duke, S. Pietro Orseoli. In 996, S. Romuald was designated abbot of S. Apollinare in Classe by his friend Otho III, but resigned in 999. For 30 years he wandered about, reforming monasteries and founding hermitages, in Tuscany, Romagna, Istria, and Southern France. For some time he made Pereum in the swamp of Ravenna, his favorite resting place. In 1005, he went to Val di Castro near Fabriano. Of his houses Camaldoli (Casa Maldoli) near the Gran Sasso d'Italia, proved the most important and became the mother-house of the Order. He had to desist from his Apostolic mission to Hungary, because he fell ill on the journey. In spite of a certain restless tendency to wander from place to place, in spite of harshness in character, exterior and asceticism, and although he lacked patience, adaptability to circumstances, and talent for organization, his fiery idealism attracted many of those who came in contact with him. After 1013 he lived in solitude on Mt. Sitría. In 1021, he went to Bifoleo and, in 1026, returned to Val di Castro, where he died, alone in his cell, 19 June, 1027. His relics were elevated and brought to Fabriano, 7 Feb., 1480. F. 19 June and 7 Feb., Rom. Mart. In 1500, his principal feast was 19 June in the Order of the Camaldolites; in 1595, it was transferred for the Latin Church to 7 Feb. dp.; both feasts are kept as dp. 1 cl. oct. by the Camaldolites; at Fabriano both feasts dp. 2 cl. Roux = S. Rufus of Metz, 11 May.

Rouin = S. Roding.

Rotus, Julius, Bp., and 27 comp., Mm., at Rome, 4 March. Julius is Pope Julius; Rotus (A. S., H. L.) S. Photius of Nicomedia, who suffered with Archelaus, Cyrinus and 27 comp. This is one of the numerous examples showing how copyists have corrupted ancient lists of martyrs. Achel.

Rovinter (Rodingus), abbot of Beaulieu, between Bar-le-Duc and Sainte-Mènebould. He introduced the rule of S. Benedict in place of the old Gallic rule. F. 1 March.—P. B.

* Roys, an Ethiopian saint. F. 20 July.—Cal. Copt.

Rozichaeus, M., at Khaskar; v. S. Adbas, 16 May.

Ruadhan = S. Rodan.

Ruadhan (Ruan, Rumon, Ronan), Bp., C., 5th century. He was an Irish saint (alleged to have been consecrated by St. Patrick), who came to labor for God in Cornwall. The particulars regarding him are vague and uncertain. Probably this is one of the instances in which the personalities of several of God's servants have been by accident confused into one. Various churches are dedicated to S. Ruadhan or Ruan. At one period he lived in Brittany, where he was equally honored as in the British isles. Perhaps it was in Brittany that he ended his earthly pilgrimage. F. 1 June (v. S. Renan or Ronan)—Rams.—O'H., VI, 1.

* Ruais of Al-Khandag in Egypt. D. about 1405. F. 18 Oct. in the Coptic church.—Cal. Copt.

Ruak, M., in Egypt; v. S. Antonius, 3 Oct.

Ruan = S. Ronan.

* Ruben, a stylite of Kartamin in Mesopotamia. F. 1 and 4 Aug.—Rb. Sl.

Rubentius and Martinus, reputed martyrs "in the Orient"; otherwise unknown. F. 17 Jan.—Hier. Mart.—H. L.

Rubianus, C., Bp. of Como; b. at Sissek in Dalmatia. He was a disciple of S. Agrippinus and became his successor as bishop of Como. D. 16 Dec., 591. His relics are in the cathedral, where they were elevated in 1590. F. 16 Dec., at Como, dp.—H. L.

Rubil (Mar Rubil), a legendary saint, a native of Thrace, superior of a monastery of 35 "monks" during the reign of Trajan; he never drank during Lent. F. 1 Aug., Syr. Men.—Patr. Or.

Rubra, Mm. of, in Africa (Mauretania). F. 17 Jan. in the Calendar of Carthage.—Achell., 20.

Ruddhlad, C., patron of Llanruddhlad, Anglesey. F. 4 Sept.—B. G., IV, 112.

Rudericus (Rodrigo), M., a priest at Cabra (Agabra), near Cordova; he was denounced by his own renegade brother for having betrayed Islamism and embraced the Christian faith. He was imprisoned and beheaded, with a Portuguese Christian, Solomon, who had been arrested on a similar charge, in 857. Their bodies are in the church of S. Genesius. F. 13 March, Rom. Mart., dp. at Cordova and Braga.—P. B.—H. L.

Rudesind (Rosendo), Bp., C.; b. of a royal family in Galicia, 26 Nov., 907. He was consecrated bishop of Dumium (Mondeñedo), in 925, but resigned in 940, and became a monk in Cellanueva monastery, founded by him, later its abbot. He was very active for the spread of monastic reform in the Benedictine Order. In 960, he was appointed administrator of Compostella for the unworthy Sisnand. Upon the death of King Sancho (967) Sisnand escaped and drove Rudesind away by force. The latter returned to Cellanueva and died there, 1 March, 977. Canonized in 1195. F. 1 March, Rom. Mart.; at Mondeñedo (princ. patron) dp. 1 cl.; Tr. rel., 30 Oct. dp. maj.

He is also patron of the diocese of Pinar del Rio, Cuba.—P. B.—H. L.

Rudolf of Bern (B.), a boy who was killed by Jews at Bern, about Easter, 1294. He was venerated before the Reformation in the "Leutkirche" at Bern, but his cult was never approved by the Church, nor was Rudolf ever declared a martyr. In 1421, his relics were placed in the New Church of S. Vincent, but removed in 1528. F. 17 Apr. dp. in the diocese of Lausanne-Geneva.—H. L.

Rudolf Acquaviva (B.), M., S. J.; he was a nephew of Claudio Acquaviva, the 5th General of the Jesuits. B. at Atri, Italy, 2 Oct., 1550; he taught philosophy at Goa from 1578 to 1580. From 1580 to 1583 he was at Fattipur with the Great Mogul Akbar, without being able either to convert him or any of his subjects. He was slain on the Peninsula Salsette, near Goa, 25 July, 1583, with four companions: Alphonse Pacheco, Peter Berna, and Antony Francisco, priests, and the lay brother Francis Aranha. Beatified, 30 Apr., 1893. F. 27 July, S. J., in the diocese of Penne-Atri, in India, and at Macao.—Seeb., 385.—P. B., XV.

Ruelin, C., Bp. of Tréguier in Brittany, successor of S. Tugdual, 6th century. F. 28 Feb. sem. at Tréguier.—P. B.

Ruffilus (Rofilus), C. Bp. of Forlimpopoli (Forum Pompilii) in Emilia. His apocryphal legend claims that he was an Athenian, sent by Pope Silvester to preach the faith at Forlimpopoli in Central Italy. He is accounted Apostle or first bishop of that city. He is said to have killed a dragon. In 1360, after the total destruction of the city, his relics were brought to Forlì. F. 18 July, Rom. Mart., dp. at Forlì and in the Vatican Basilica.—Off. pr.—Rams.

Rufina, Moderata, Romana, Secundus, and seven companions, Florentinus, Geminianus, and Saturus, Mm., at Sirmium. F. 6 Apr.—H. L.

Rufina and Martina, Vv., formerly in the breviary of Utrecht, 20 June. Grot.

Rufina and Secunda, Vv., Mm. According to the legendary account, they were natives of Rome and engaged to Christian men, who apostatized, terrified by the horrors of the persecution under Valerian. To escape from a detestable union with the apostates, Rufina and Secunda secretly left Rome. Overtaken at Silva Candida, nine miles from the city, they were beheaded and buried on the Via Cornelia, 10 July, 257. Their relics were brought to the church of S. John "in Fonte," in 1120. They are patronesses of the suburban dioceses of Porto and S. Rufina. A church is dedicated to them at Rome. F. 10 July Rom. Mart., sem.

Rufinus, M., at Hermopolis; v. S. Codratus, 9 March.

Rufinus, M., at Nicomedia; v. S. Quadratus, 10 March.

Rufinus, "The Wonder Worker," deacon, and Aquilina, matron, Mm., at Sinope in Pontus. Aquilina was incarcerated because she provided for the necessities of Rufinus when in prison. 200 soldiers were converted by their fortitude in torture. All were beheaded in 310. F. 7 Apr., Rom. Mart., MGr., Mz.; 8 Apr., Rb. Sl.

Rufinus, M., in Africa; v. S. Epiphanius, 7 Apr.

Rufinus, Bp. of Glendalough, Wicklow, and of Bangor, Down. He probably left Bangor to place himself under the guidance of S. Kevin, whom he may have succeeded as abbot, in 618. F. 22 Apr.—O'H., IV, 271.

Rufinus, M., in Africa; v. S. Marianus, 3 May.

Rufinus, M., at Nicaea; v. S. Saturninus, 7 May.

Rufinus and Valerius, Mm.; b. probably at Bazoches, diocese of Soissons; they were officers of the imperial guard and were decapitated by order of Rictiovarus, 14 June, 287. Their relics were formerly at their own church at Bazoches; since 1617 they are in the cathedral of Soissons. F. 14 June; at Soissons dp. maj. 15 June.—Chr. Leg., 148.—P. B.

Rufinus and Martia, Mm., at Syracuse. F. 21 June, Rom. Mart.; at Syracuse, sem. 3 July.—Comm.

Rufinus and 868 others, Mm., at Alexandria. June 22 (23) Eg., 74. The companions do not belong to Rufinus, and the latter may be the martyr of Syracuse, 21 June.

Rufinus, and Aventius, hermits in a valley near Sarezzano, diocese of Tortona, where their relics are venerated. F. 14 July.—H. L.

Rufinus (Ruffin), M., at Stone; v. S. Wulfegad, 24 July.

Rufinus, M., at Assisi. He is perhaps identical with Rufinus, the first Bp. of Assisi. His "acts" are spurious. F. 30 July, Rom. Mart., dp. at Assisi.—H. L.

Rufinus, Bp. of the Marsi, M. He is said to have been beheaded near Rieti, with the priest Cesidius and others, 11 Aug., 4th century. His "Life" is unreliable. F. 11 Aug., Rom. Mart.; at Marsi and Nocera, dp. 11 Aug.—H. L.

Rufinus, M., first bishop of Assisi, sent by Pope S. Fabianus in 235. The legend claims that, before going to Assisi, he preached the Gospel amongst the Marsi. Some authorities, however, contend that the Rufinus who preached to the Marsi and the Rufinus of Assisi are two different persons. He suffered martyrdom at Assisi, 11 Aug., 236 (?), with Ss. Alexander and Silon. His body is in the cathedral of Pistoja. There is great difficulty in disentangling this saint with his fellow-sufferers from others of the same name. F. 11 Aug., dp. 1 cl. oct. Rufus, alleged ninth Bp. of Metz, successor of S. Sambatius. His history is legendary. D. 7 Nov., in the second half of the 4th century. His relics were transferred to Gau-Odernheim, in Rhenish Hessa, about 830. F. 7 Nov., Rom. Mart. At Metz, towards the end of the Middle Ages, 27 Aug., and again, 11 May: Rufus and Agathimber, Bps. of Metz; now 7 Nov. dp.—P. B.—Mg.

Rufus, Bp., M., a Patrician, ex-consul, and Roman general at Ravenna. He was converted when S. Apollinaris cured his sick daughters by his prayers; exiled, he went to Capua, where he was elected bishop; he was beheaded on 27 Aug., year unknown. It is not known in what relation he stood to St. Priscus, who seems to have been the first bishop of Capua. St. Rufus was doubtless a martyr, but the people venerate other local martyrs bearing the name of Rufus, and there is much confusion in the tradition regarding them. F. 27 Aug., Rom. Mart., dp. at Ravenna; dp. 2 cl. at Capua; simpl. in Bohemia and Moravia.—H. L.—A. S.

Rufus and Rufinianus, Mm., brothers; they died by the sword. F. 8 Sept., MGr. They may be identical with Rufinus and Rufinianus of 9 Sept., Rom. Mart.—H. L.

Rufus, M., at Damascus; v. S. Paul, 25 Sept.

Rufus, C., one of the ascetes praised by S. Theodore the Studite as "Preachers of Obedience." F. 22 Oct., Mz.

Rufus (Roux), founder of the Church of Avignon. According to a late tradition he was the son of Simon of Cyrene, who helped Jesus carry his cross. He is said to have followed S. Paul to Spain, where he was appointed first bishop of Tortosa. Then he accompanied S. Sergius to Narbonne and preached the faith in the region of Avignon. D. about 90. This legend is spurious; Avignon hardly had any bishops before the 5th century. F. 12 Nov., Rom. Mart., dp. by the Regular Canons of S. Augustine. In 1039 under the invocation of S. Rufus a Congregation of Canons Regular of St. Augustine was founded at Avignon, which spread to Spain and Portugal. They were secularized in 1764. F. of S. Rufus at Avignon (princ. patron) formerly 22 March, now 14 Nov. dp. 1 cl. oct.; at Tortosa, 27 Nov. dp. (formerly 14 Nov. 2 cl. oct.).—P. B., III, 604.—Mg.

Rufus, a prominent member of the Church of Rome, to whom S. Paul (Rom. XVI, 13) sent greetings. He is probably identical with Rufus, the son of Simon of Cyrene (Mark, XV, 21), since Mark supposes that his Roman readers are well acquainted with Rufus. The Greeks say he was bishop of Thebes in Greece or in Egypt. According to an Oriental tradition he preached to the Dailumites, who killed him. An apocryphal tradition makes him first bishop of Tortosa in Spain and of Avignon in France. F. 21 Nov., Rom. Mart.; 8 Apr., MGr. full office in the Greek Church, with S. Herodion and others.—Comm.—Scherin.

Rufus, M., killed at Rome, under Diocletian, with his entire family; a later legend says that they were all converted by the well known martyr S. Chrysogonus. F. 28 Nov., Rom. Mart.—H. L.

Rufus and Zosimus, Mm., "citizens of Philippi" in Macedonia (or of Antioch?). They were brought to Rome with S. Ignatius and thrown to the beasts two days before him, 18 Dec., 107. F. 18 Dec., Rom. Mart.—H. L.—P. B.

Rule = S. Regulus.—Ftpr., 3, 186.

Ruma, M., at Nedshran; v. S. Arethas, 24 Oct.

Rumold (Rombauld), M., patron of Malines (Mechlin); d. towards the end of the 8th century. His "Life" rests on vague traditions and is obscured by luxuriant legends. According to the oldest account (11th century), he was an Irishman, who led a hermit's life at Mechlin and died a martyr there. Other accounts say that he lived at the period of the Norman invasions, made a pilgrimage to Rome, and was killed by his avaricious companions on the River Schelde. F. 1 July, Rom. Mart., dp. 1 cl. oct. at Mechlin; 3 July, Can. Regul. dp. In the cathedral of Mechlin: Sunday before Pentecost the Restoration and Collection of the relics of S. Rumold, dp. maj. 27 Apr. Tr. rel. dp. 2 cl. An Irish tradition claims that he was bishop of Dublin, successor of Archbishop Galafer, and was sent to France by Pope Stephen III, in 755. But there were no bishops in Dublin prior to the 11th century.—O'H., VII, 1.—P. B.—Mg.

Rumon = S. Ronan.

Rumon, C., transferred to Tavistock, in 960. F. 5 Jan. in the Devon Calendar. He is identical with S. Ruan (Ronan) of Locronan, Brittany.

Rumpharius (Romphare, Rephaire), C., Bp. of Coutances. B. in England; he crossed over to Gaul, landed at Barfleur (Manche), and attached himself to S. Lo (Laudus), whom he succeeded. D. in 728. F. 26 Nov., dp. maj. at Coutances.—P. B.—Mg.

Rumwold, C., a scion of the royal family of Northumbria. He died in early youth, 3 Nov., about 650. He is said to have spoken miraculously, and to have made open profession of the Christian faith immediately after being baptized, and died shortly afterwards (in 650). This miracle procured to him a place in the catalogue of saints. He was venerated chiefly in Northamptonshire and in Buckinghamshire. F. at Brackley, Northamptonshire, 28 Aug. His relics were later brought to Runtham.—St.—Angl.

Runnach of Inis-More, Ireland. F. 23 July.—O'H., VII, 303.

Rupert, a Frankish regionary bishop, founder and first bishop of Salzburg. He was called from Worms by Duke Theodo II, of Bavaria, probably to open the way for the erection of a local bishopric in Noricum, which province then depended on the metropolitan see of Aquileja. Rupert went to Juvavum, there founded the abbey of S. Peter, which was also his episcopal see, but on account of litigation over jurisdiction with Aquileja, no diocese could be established before 739. With his monks (Ss. Chuniald and Gisilar) he evangelized and civilized the population, increased the revenues of his church, promoted the exploitation of the salt mines, and gave Juvavum its new name, "Salzburg." He never preached the Gospel in Pannonia. D. 27 March, 715 (?). The year of his death is uncertain. That he lived under Childebert I or II (6th to 7th century) cannot be maintained. The most probable opinion places his activity in 693-715, under the reign of Childebert III. His relics were elevated, 24 Sept., 774. A late tradition at Salzburg claims that Rupert was born in Ireland and that his Irish name was Robertach. Some Irish writers (e.g., Dr. Lanigan) maintain, that Rupert was of Frankish descent. F. at Salzburg, 27 March, dp. 2 cl.; Tr. rel. 24 Sept., dp. 1 cl. oct. (princ. patron); at Gurk, Seckau, and Lavant, 27 March and 24 Sept. dp. 2 cl.; Rom. Rupert, C., a scion of the dukes of Lorraine. After the death of his pagan father, Robold, he was educated by his mother, Bertha. At the age of 16 years, after a pilgrimage to Rome, he retired to the solitude of the Rupertsberg, near Bingen, where he died, 20 years old, some time in the 9th century. S. Hildegard wrote his life. F. 15 May dp. at Treves, Mayence, and Limburg. He is patron of Bingerbrück. In 1632, his relics were brought to Eibingen and, in 1814, to the chapel of S. Rochus.—D. G., I, 451.—H. D.

Rupert (B.), prior of St. Georgen in the Black Forest, 12th century, abbot of Ottoberen. He introduced the reform of Hirsau at St. Georgen. He is venerated by the people for the miracles which were performed at his tomb; his cult, however, was not approved. F. 15 Aug.—H. L.

Ruphillus (Ruffillus), Bp., C.; he was a native of Greece. In 330 he became bishop of Forlimpopoli. He evangelized this city and made the temple of Isis his cathedral. D. 18 July, 382, at Forlimpopoli. After the destruction of the city (1360) his relics were brought to Forlì (in 1364). F. 18 July, dp. 1 cl. oct. Sabagotha, M., at Cordova; v. S. Aurelius, 27 July.

* Sabarjesu (Sabhr-isho) Rustam, a Nestorian saint; b. at Herem, monk at Izla under Narsai, and prior of Beth-Kuka monastery; he wrote a number of discourses on the Dispensation of Our Lord, etc. 7th century. F. in the Nestorian Church on the 1st Sunday in Oct.—Nill., II, 688.—Wr., 177.

Sabas and Isaias, with 36 companions, monks, martyred by the Saracens (Arabs) on Mt. Sina, 28 Dec., 373. F. 14 Jan., Rom. Mart.—Comm.

Sabas Rastko I, C., first Metropolitan of Servia, son of Stephen Nemanja (Megajupan of Servia.) In 1169, he entered the Russian monastery on Mt. Athos; then he founded with his father the famous monastery of Chilandari on Mt. Athos. In 1221, he was appointed metropolitan of the nation. As such he crowned his brother, Stephen, first king of Servia, in 1222. He resigned in favor of S. Arsenius and made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, from where he brought the famous picture of Mary, called "Tricheir, the Three Handed." D. at Tirnova, Bulgaria, in 1237. His relics were burned by the Turks, 27 Apr., 1595, at Vracar, near Belgrade. F. 14 Jan., in the Servian Church, Mz. Mrt. Like his brother, who obtained his crown from Pope Honorius III, Sabas was a Catholic.—Mrt.—Mz.—P. B.

Sabas II, C., third metropolitan of Servia, youngest son of King S. Stephen, the "First Crowned" of Servia. After a pilgrimage to the Holy Land he became a monk in the national monastery of Chilandari, founded by his grandfather, and succeeded S. Arsenius, in 1261. D. in 1268. He was a Catholic. The separation from Rome was effected about 20 years after his death. His relics are at Ipek. F. 8 Feb., in the Servian Church.

* Sabas of Twer, abbot. With his brother Barsanuphius he founded the monastery of Sawin, Russia, of which he was the first abbot; d. 1467. F. 2 March in Russia. Mz.

Sabas, M., at Bardiaboch; v. S. Zanitas, 27 March.

Sabas, M., a Visigoth, lector or chanter (not a soldier) of the priest Sansala (Arian?) in Rumania, then occupied by the Visigoths. The Visigoths who under Bishop Ulfilas settled south of the Danube in 340, were all Arians; of those who remained north of the Danube some were Catholics, some Arians; so it is difficult to know if S. Sabas was an Arian or a Catholic. He was tortured by henchmen of Atharid, a Visigoth warrior, and after long torments drowned in the River Mussovo, near Tirgovist, 12 Apr., 372. He was 38 years old. His body, with a letter of a Scythian bishop (Bretannio?), was sent to S. Basil in Cappadocia, hence he is sometimes said to have suffered in Cappadocia. There was an intimate connection between Cappadocia and the Visigoths, since many Cappadocian prisoners of war were received into the Gothic nation; even the great Ulfilas was born of Cappadocian parents. S. Sabas is patron of the national Rumanian College at Bucharest. His "acts" and the letter of the Goths to the Church of Cappadocia are genuine. F. 12 Apr., Rom. Mart.; in Russia and in some MGr., 15 Apr.; in Sirmium, Bosnia, and at Scepus, 12 Apr. dp.—Ruini., 614.—P. B.—Thr. M., 216, 288.—Comm.

Sabas. Rb. Sl. mentions 12,634 Mm., from whom S. Sabas, the Goth, learned his faith. They were killed under the pagan chief Athanaric, 16 April.

Sabas (Mar Saba), a Persian M. F. 13 Apr., Men. Syr., Rb. Sl.

Sabas, the Goth (called Stratelita, i. e., the General), a Roman officer of Teutonic (Gothic) descent. Accused of having visited Christian prisoners, he was subjected to torture, and, with 70 men, whom he had converted, beheaded at Rome, 24 Apr., 272, under Aurelian. His relics are in the church of S. Cecilia. F. 24 Apr., Rom. Mart.; full office in the Greek Church. He may be identical with the Visigoth martyr of 12 Apr.—Thr. M., 216.

Sabas. The MGr. on Apr. 24 commemorate 70 Mm., who were converted by S. Sabas, the Goth.

Sabas, M.; v. S. Abads, 7 July.

Sabas, C., one of the priests and disciples of S. Methodius, who, when banished from Moravia by the Germans, preached the Gospel in Bulgaria. D. about 900. F. 27 July in the Bulgarian Church, Mz.

Sabas (Pirhuznap) and 11,000 (?) companions, Mm., legendary saints of the Jacobite Church. Sabas was an alleged son of Shapur, king of Persia. Shapur is said to have killed 11,000 people to avenge the conversion of his son to Christianity, near Phir in the mountains of Turabdin. The Syrian tradition claims that Sabas was only ten years and 8 months old, and that his torture lasted 490 days. He is patron of the great monastic church at Hach in Mesopotamia, where his relics are venerated. F. 16 Aug., 3 cl., in the Syrian Church; also 23 Jan. and 16 Apr., Rb. Sl.—Jac., 288.

Sabas, solitary and bishop = Guisniazdad, the Median, in baptism called "Sabas," apostle of the pagans. F. 18 and 20 Aug., Rb. Sl.

Sabas (Mar Sabai), at Hinan, in the land of Edessa. He had been an ascete in a desert on the Tigris River, converted the wife and son of Shapur II, and was banished to Merw, where he was elected bishop and evangelized the country around. F. 24 (20) Aug., Syr. Men., Rb. Sl. He may be identical with the preceding saint.

Sabas, priest, and Alexander, Mm. F. 27 Aug., at Antioch, Old Syr. Mart.—Achel.

* Sabas of Swenigorod (Storoshewsk), abbot in Russia; he was a disciple of S. Sergius of Radonesh and, after S. Nikon, abbot of the great Troitzkoi Laura (Monastery of the Holy Trinity). In 1394, he founded a monastery at Swenigorod on Mt. Storoshi, where he died, in 1407. F. 3 Dec. His relics were found incorrupt in 1652.—Mrt. Mz.

Sabas, M.; he was thrown into a hot oven and is venerated by the Copts, 5 Dec.—Cal. Copt.

Sabas, abbot, C.; b. at Mutaslasca, near Caesarea in Cappadocia, of noble parents. Sick at heart over the discord between his uncles, he fled to a Basilian monastery, before he was nine years of age. In 456, he went to Palestine and attached himself to S. Theoctistus, then to S. Euthymius, and having spent many years, partly in the wilderness, partly in monasteries, retired to a cavern over the brook Cedron and there, in 483, founded his great Laura (Mar Saba) and six other establishments (492, Castellion; 508, Spelaion, etc.). To overcome the opposition in his own house, he was ordained priest by the Patriarch Sallust of Jerusalem. In 491, and, in 494, was appointed archimandrite of all the hermit colonies of Palestine. On account of dissensions among his anchorites, he left Mar Saba and founded a new Laura at Thecua. He was the champion of orthodoxy against Monophysitism and, by a journey to Constantinople, in 511, tried to determine Emperor Anastasius against the Monophysites and, in 531, Emperor Justinian I against the Samaritans, Nestorians, and Origenists. His part in composing the liturgical Typicum and the rule which bears his name, cannot be sufficiently established. He died in his Laura on the Cedron, 5 Dec., 532. His relics were stolen by the Venetians and brought to the cathedral of Venice. At Rome, in the 7th century, a church was built in his honor by Greek anchorites. F. 5 Dec., Rom. Mart., full office in the Greek and Syrian Churches; dp. at Venice, Jerusalem, and Constantinople: by the Latin Basilians, dp. maj. His name is in the Proskomide of the Greek Mass.—Ord., 117.—C. Sabinus, second bishop of Piacenza, C.; b. at Rome, ordained deacon at Milan, and sent by Pope Damasus to the Orient to settle the Meletian schism at Antioch. Later on he succeeded S. Victor in the see of Piacenza. He found the body of S. Antonino, M. He was a personal friend of S. Ambrose, who used to send him his writings for revision and approval. He seems to have been a man of singular holiness and of remarkable erudition. St. Gregory recounts a miracle wrought by him. He assisted at the synod of Aquileja, in 381. D. 11 Dec., under Innocent I. He was buried by S. Maurus in the church of the Apostles, 17 Jan. In the 9th century the body was brought to his own church. F. 11 Dec., Rom. Mart.; at Piacenza, Deposition 11 Dec. dp. Tr. rel. 17 Jan. dp. 2 cl.—H. L.—P. B.

Sabinus, Bp. of Faenza (280) and of Assisi (about 290). He is falsely called bishop of Chiusi and Spoleto. He converted the governor Venustianus and his wife and sons, who were beheaded with him. He suffered at Spoleto, in 303. His hands were cut off, because he threw to the ground a little gold statue of Jupiter. His two deacons, Marcellus and Exuperantius, died under torture at Assisi. Their names, however, are only known from the unreliable "Passion." The tomb and church of S. Sabinus were a little more than a mile away from Spoleto. His cult spread from Spoleto to Assisi, Fermo, etc. (Del. Or.). F. 30 Dec. Rom. Mart.; at Fermo, 30 Dec. Samuel, the last Judge and the first Prophet in Israel. He was of the tribe of Levi, a son of Elkana and Anna. Being born of Anna, a fruit of prayer, after long sterility, he was vowed to the Lord as a Nazarite. When three years old he was conducted to Silo, to be educated by the High Priest Heli. For his piety he was called by God to prophesy and soon attained celebrity. After the loss of the Ark of the Covenant and the death of Heli, he founded the first prophetic school at Rama. At last, on the day of Maspha, after a servitude of 20 years, he led the people to victory over the Philistines and was elected Judge of Israel. When, because of his advanced age, he could not prevent the tyranny of the Philistines, he, by divine command, anointed Saul as leader of the people in war, and, when, after Saul's victory over the Ammonites, the Jews demanded a king, directed the election at Maspha. He anointed Saul king at Galgala and retired from the office of Judge. As Prophet he remained the mediator between God and the king and, when Saul proved disobedient, announced to him his rejection. Having anointed David, he retired to Rama, where he died. Before the battle of Mount Gelboe his spirit appeared to Saul and announced to him his death. Samuel was an eminent personage. Unselfishness and zeal for the Jewish theocracy and for law and justice adorned his character. He was buried at Ramatha. His relics were found in 406 and brought to Constantinople (to his own church). F. 20 Aug. (Tr. rel.), Rom. Mart.; full office in the Greek Church; dp. at Jerusalem and Venice (where his relics are in his own church).—C. E.—Buch.—W.W.—Thr. M., 237.

Sebastian, one of the most renowned of the Roman martyrs; his deposition in the catacomb on the Old Appian Way is mentioned by the chronographer as early as 354 on the 20 Jan. According to the local tradition of Milan he was b. at Milan (or at Narbonne and brought up in Milan?), martyred at Rome in the fourth century but venerated also at Milan. His rhetorical "Passion" makes him the central figure of a large cycle of martyrs, Ss. Marcus and Marcellianus, Polycarp, Nicostratus, and Zoe, Tranquillinus, Claudius, and Chromatius, sixty-eight in all. He took care of the prisoners, stimulated their courage, and wrought miracles to confirm his teaching. When these things were reported to Emperor Diocletian, he ordered him to be taken out into a field and shot to death with arrows. The soldiers set him up as a target and left him for dead, bristling with arrows. But S. Irene, a Roman lady, nursed him back to life. When convalescent, he again presented himself to the Emperor, who in his rage ordered him to be beaten to death with clubs and his body to be cast into the great sewer. A devout woman, named Lucina, rescued the body and buried it reverently in her own garden (289). This "Passion" was composed in the fifth century and was formerly ascribed to S. Ambrose. Its statements are somewhat incredible. The genuine "acts" of the Roman martyrs were mostly lost before 312; the rest was destroyed by the various fires which devastated the Holy City; the stories were reconstructed from floating traditions and reminiscences from the "acts" of Oriental saints. In the case of St. Sebastian little more than the simple fact of his martyrdom can be proved. The oldest picture (mosaic in S. Pietro ai Vincoli) shows him as a bearded man in court costume, with a nimbus. The Renaissance artists represent him as a youth, unclothed and transfixed with arrows. Over his tomb on the Appian Way ("Platonia" of the Apostles) Pope Damasus, in 367, built the famous basilica, which is to-day one of the seven principal churches of Rome. In 829, a large portion of his relics is said to have been brought to S. Medard at Soissons, where the feast of the Translation of Ss. Sebastian and Gregory was celebrated on 9 Dec., the Elevation of Sebastian, 13 Oct. He is patron of archers and against pestilence. F. 20 Jan., Rom. Mart., dp. in the Latin Church. In the Greek Church (with his companions, under the title of "Defender of the Church,"), 18 Dec., full office. He is patron of many cities and dioceses, e. g., Seville, Rio de Janeiro, Havana, Porto Allegre (Brazil), Gallipoli, Caserta, etc. His solemn feast is kept at Havana, 16 Nov.; at Castel Gandolfo, 1st Sunday of Sept.; at Taverna (diocese of Catanzaro), 12 Sept. F. of Tr. rel. at San Sebastiano, Rome, 26 Oct., dp. maj.; at Galatone (diocese of Nardò), 2nd Sunday in July. Sergius and Bacchus, Mm. They were Roman soldiers, officers in the household of Emperor Maximian. Sergius is said to have been "primicerius gymnasiu tironum" at Trieste, and Bacchus a subaltern officer. For refusing to sacrifice to the gods, they were ignominiously dressed in women's clothing and conducted through the streets of Arabissus (near Comana in Cappadocia). Then they were scourged until Bacchus died, 1 Oct., 290. Sergius was brought to Resapha (Augusta Euphratasiae) in Syria, where, after various tortures, he was decapitated, 7 Oct., 290. The tomb of S. Sergius at Resapha was a famous shrine. In 431, Bishop Alexander of Hierapolis built a magnificent church in his honor. In 434, the town of Resapha was raised to the rank of an episcopal see and was named Sergiopolis. Emperor Justinian I enlarged and fortified it. Sergius was venerated as patron of Syria. Parts of his relics were transferred to Venice, where these saints were patrons of the ancient cathedral. In the seventh century a church was dedicated to them in Rome. F. 7 Oct., Rom. Servanus (Serf), Bp., C., a Scot or Pict; apostle and patron of the Orkney islands. He was taken from a Culdee community and consecrated bishop in the 8th century. His remains were at Culros. F. 20 Apr. (O'H., IV, 248). Irish authors claim that he was born in Ireland and became a disciple of S. Patrick; they deny that he was bishop of the Culdees, or that he was sent by S. Palladius, in 432, to preach in the Orkneys. He founded the famous monastery of Culross, Fifehire, Scotland, and educated S. Kentigern. F. 1 July in Scotland.—Barr., 95.—O'H., VII, 26.

Servatius, first Bp. of Tongern in the Low Countries, c. 338–384. Many contradictory accounts are found in the sources, to which were added (11th century) downright falsifications. He is said to have been born in Armenia of a Jewish family, led to Tongern by an angel, possessed the gift of languages, etc. He took an active part in the Arian controversy at the synods of Sardica (343), Cologne (346), and Rimini (359). The usurper Magnentius sent him, with another bishop, to Emperor Constantius, but the embassy seems to have been unsuccessful. He foretold the invasion of the Huns, which happened seventy years later. One of his merits was his hospitality to St. Athanasius, when the latter had been driven from Egypt by the Arians. D., after a pilgrimage to Rome, at Maastricht, 13 May, 384. The same year Tongern was destroyed by some barbarian tribes and Servatius had no successor for 100 years. F. 13 May, Rom. Mart.; at the end of the Middle Ages his feast was kept nearly all over France and Germany; now dp. at Cologne, Liège, and Ruremond; Tr. rel. at Ruremond, 7 July. He was declared Protector of the Dominican Order by Leo XII. P. B.—Mg.

Servian Saints, Feast of All the. This feast is kept in the Servian orthodox (schismatic) Church on Aug. 30. (Nilles, I, 443). The Servian Church venerates many kings of the former realm of Servia, e.g., Simeon Nemanja (13 Feb.), Wladimir (22 May), Czar Lazar (15 June), Milutin (30 Oct.), etc. Also many Servian bishops are in her calendar, e.g., S. Servulus, C., a beggar at Rome; paralyzed in all his members from childhood, he was brought by his mother daily to the porch of S. Clement's church where he asked for alms, which, after deducting his own living, he gave to other beggars. When the hour of his death arrived, he bade those surrounding him to cease from their chanting of Psalms as he already heard their words taken up by the angels in Heaven. St. Gregory the Great describes the scene in one of his homilies and seems to have known St. Servulus personally. His body is in S. Clemente, under the altar of the Blessed Sacrament. Seven Angels, who stand before the Throne of God. Following Clement of Alexandria, many Fathers believed that these are the highest of all the Angels. The names of three of them are mentioned in S. Scripture: Michael, Gabriel, and Raphael. The apocrypha add a fourth: Uriel. A painting in Rome calls the remaining three: Shealtiel, Jehudiel, and Berachiel. The Copts, who venerate the angels in a special manner, give the following names: Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, Uriel (Suriel), Raguel, Afnen, and Sakuel. They have, however, no feast common to all seven, though they have assigned feasts to the Four Living Beings and to the Twenty-four Ancients. At Palermo, Sicily, a church is dedicated to the Seven Angels, the titular feast of which is celebrated on April 20, formerly the second Sunday after Easter. This feast is kept in the entire archdiocese of Palermo.—Ordo Panorm.—Oswald, Angelologie, p. 71.

Seven Founders of the Servite Order. To the Florentine noblemen Bonifilius Monaldi, Bonajuncta Manetti, Manettus dell' Antella, Bartholomaeus degl' Amidei, Sosthenes Sostegni, Hugo Uguccio Lippi and Alexius Falconieri on 15 Aug., 1233, the Blessed Virgin Mary appeared, advising them to withdraw from the world. On 8 Sept., 1233, they retired to a hut at Camarzia; in June, 1234, to Monte Senario. Here the Bl. Virgin again appeared to them (13 Apr., 1240), conferred on them a black habit, instructed them to follow the rule of S. Augustine, and to found the Order of her Servants. The order was first approved 13 March, 1349, and finally, 11 Feb., 1404. The cult of S. Alexius was approved 20 Nov., 1717; that of the others, 31 July, 1724. The feast of S. Alexius, 17 Feb., since 1718; the feast of the others was granted 3 March, 1728, for 11 Feb., the anniversary of the final approbation of the Order. They were all canonized, 15 Jan., 1887. Seven Brothers, Mm. The seven alleged sons of S. Felicitas, M. Their names are: Januarius, Felix and Philip, scourged to death; Silvanus, thrown headlong over a precipice; Alexander, Vitalis, and Martialis, beheaded. Their mother was beheaded four months later. These martyrs appear to have suffered under Emperor Antoninus Pius (150), though some hagiologists insist upon a later date. These seven saints are martyrs from various Roman cemeteries (Priscillae, Jordanorum, Maximi, Praetextati) and were believed by the people to be brothers, because all of them have their feast on July 10. In the sixth century they commenced to be considered as sons of S. Felicitas. But they were neither brothers nor sons of S. Felicitas. Felicitas suffered martyrdom later. The tomb of S. Silvanus, one of the seven martyrs, adjoined that of S. Felicitas, and it is quite possible that this circumstance gave rise to popular legend of the Seven Sons of S. Felicitas. F. 10 July, sem. in the Latin Church.—Rams.—C. E. (Felicitas).

Seven Robbers, Mm., on the isle of Corfu, in the 2nd century. Their names were: Saturninus, Inischolus, Faustianus, Januarius, Marsalius, Euphrasius, and Mammius. They were converted in prison by Ss. Sospater and Jason, disciples of the Apostles, and were thrown into caldrons filled with seething oil and pitch. The story is apocryphal. F. 29 Apr., Rom. Mart., MGr.—Comm.—Rams.

Seven Sleepers, Martyrs of Ephesus. According to the legend these were holy youths ("brothers"), who, during the persecution of Decius, fled into the cave of Celion (Mochlos, Anchilos), near Ephesus, and were walled up there by order of Decius. They woke up under Theodosius II. The Latin legend calls them: Achillides-Maximinianus, Diomedes-Malchus, Eugenius-Martinianus, Probatius-Constantinus, Stephanus-Dionysius, Sabatius-Joannes, Cyriacus-Serapion. In the Greek legend their names are: Maximilianos, Jamblichos, Martianos Joannes, Dionysos, Constantinos, and Antoninos. A remarkable find of relics in the 5th century probably gave rise to this beautiful legend, which is a mere romance designed to illustrate the doctrine of the resurrection of the flesh. The Latin original may have come from Africa and was translated into Greek and Syriac. The legend occasioned the cult of these mythical saints first at Ephesus (6 century), from whence it spread over the entire Church. The motif is found also in pagan legends,—the long sleep of Eudymion, the myth of Epimenides, and the nine Sleepers of Sardinia; also in the Jewish legend of Choni-Onias of Abimelech. The story is first told by S. James of Sarug, about 500, then by S. Gregory of Tours; Copts, Ethiopians, and Armenians, all have this legend. Even Mohammed adopted it (18th Sure). F. in the Latin Church, mostly 27 June or 27 July (but not at Rome); to-day it is kept at Augsburg, 27 June, at Cologne, 27 July. (Sarum Brev.), at Smyrna (Lat.), 27 July dp. Severinus, C., apostle of Noricum. By birth he was a Latin (African?). Having spent some time with monks in the Orient, he settled permanently in Noricum, between Vienna and Passau, soon after Attila's death (433). In this largely Christian country he erected for his disciples the first monasteries: one at Faviana (Mauer near Oeling), where he usually resided, the other at Passau. The calamities of his age (migration of nations) made of the hermit a man of action. Again and again he left his retreat to assist the people in their bodily and spiritual misery. The magnetism of his personality highly impressed the pagan and Arian Germans, e.g., Odoaker, whom he met as the representative of the oppressed Roman population. D. at Favianae, 8 Jan., 482. In accordance with his own wish, his body was brought by his disciples to Italy, first to Montefeltro, four years later to the Castellum Lucullanum, near Naples. He is patron of S. Severo, Italy, and of Ss. Severino e Sossio at Naples; he is also protector of vineyards. F. at Passau and Salzburg (1515), 5 Jan., now at Vienna, Munich, and Passau, dp. maj. Severus, C., Bp. of Ravenna. He had been a poor weaver; a dove which, according to the legend, lighted on his head after the invocation of the Holy Ghost, caused the people to proclaim him bishop of Ravenna, in 283. This legendary occurrence was transferred to all his predecessors up to S. Adheritus, and the honorary title "elected by the dove" was given to them. Severus accompanied the papal legate to the synod of Sardica. D. 1 Feb., 348. His relics, with those of his wife S. Vincentia, and his daughter S. Innocentia, were stolen from his monastery, near Ravenna, by a Gallic cleric named Felix. Archb. Otger, in 836, brought them from Pavia to Mayence. The body of S. Severus later on was transferred to Erfurt, where the collegiate church is dedicated to him. F. 1 Feb., Rom. Mart., dp. maj. (minor patron) at Ravenna. Silverius, M., Pope, 8 June, 536–537. He was b. at Frosinone, Campania, son of Pope S. Hormisdas, who had been married before becoming one of the higher clergy. When still a subdeacon he was raised to the Apostolic see to succeed S. Agapetus, by the Ostrogoth King Theudahat. His election was, later on, approved by the clergy. After Rome was taken by the Greek general Belisar, Empress Theodora tried to obtain, through the ambitious deacon Vigilius, the restoration of Anthimus (patriarch of Constantinople, who had been deposed by S. Agapetus) and, thereby, the rejection of the Council of Chalcedon. Silverius was accused of high treason, deposed, and exiled to Patara in Lycia. In his place the deacon Vigilius was raised to the papal throne, 19 March, 537. Informed by the bishop of Patara of the Pope's innocence, Emperor Justinian permitted Silverius to return to Rome for a revision of his trial, but on the way he was seized by henchmen of Belisar and incarcerated on the isle of Palmaria. There he died of exposure and privation, 20 June, about 537. His remains were never taken from the isle of Palmaria (Ponza). F. 20 June, Rom. Mart.; since 13th century, simpl. in the Latin Church; dp. at Rome; dp. 1 cl. oct. at Frosinone and on the isle of Ponza (principal patron)—C. E.—W.W.—Buch.—Biogr.

Silverless or Moneyless Saints (Anargyroi). The Greeks venerate thirteen of their martyrs under this title, because these saints, as physicians, assisted those ill of various diseases without taking any pay. Who these martyrs were in ordinary life cannot be determined now; it seems, however, that not one of them was a physician. In consequence of miracles performed at their tombs the faithful attributed to them a special power in healing of the sick, and the pious believed that they had practiced medicine before they gave up their lives for Christ, without taking pay, as becomes an ideal Christian. The Silverless Saints are: Cosmas and Damian (1 July, 17 Oct., 1 Nov. in the Greek Church); Cyrus and John (31 Jan.), and Panteleemon and Hermolaus (27 July). These three pairs of saints are commemorated daily in the introduction to the Greek (Russian, Servian, etc.) Mass. The other anargyroi are: Photinus and Anicetus (12 Aug.), Sampson and Diomedes (16 Aug.), Silvester, C. According to a late tradition, he was sent to Gaul by S. Peter, with S. Silvinus, who raised him to life by the staff of S. Peter. He preached the Gospel at Levroux, diocese of Bourges, where his relics are venerated. The story is untrustworthy. S. probably lived in the 3rd or 4th century, and is identical with S. Silvanus of Levroux. F. 22 Sept. P. B.—Mg.

Silvester, C., Bp. of Chalon-sur-Saône. He took part in the synods of Epaoine (517) and Lyons (520). D. 20 Nov., about 525. His body was elevated by Bp. Girbald, in 878. F. 20 Nov., Rom. Silvester Guzzolini, abbot, founder of the Silvestrine Congregation of Benedictines. B. at Osimo, in 1177; he studied law at Padua and Bologna. Having turned to theology, he obtained a canonry at Osimo. To get away from the hostility of his bishop, he retired, in 1227, to Grotta Fucile, near Osimo. The impulse to leave his splendid ecclesiastical career was given him by the sight of the decaying body of one of his kinsmen of noble birth and handsome appearance. In 1231 he built a small monastery for his followers under the primitive rule of S. Benedict, which he rendered more severe by special constitutions, founding thereby the Congregation of the Silvestrines, the first of the Italian reform congregations, approved by Innocent IV, 27 June, 1247. He particularly insisted on the observance of perfect poverty. D. 26 Nov., 1267. His cult was approved by Clement IV. He was canonized by Clement VIII, in 1598. His relics are at Mte. Fano. Silvester, C., Pope, 314–335. A native of Rome; he was the head of the Church when Emperor Constantine erected the basilicas of S. Peter in the Vatican and S. John in the Lateran. His story is embellished by luxuriant legends. He is said to have concealed himself on Mt. Soracte during the persecution to escape consecration; to have cured Constantine of leprosy, and to have baptized him; to have celebrated a synod with 275 bishops in the baths of Trajan; to have tied up a dragon in a cave below the Forum, etc. The simple established facts are: that he sent Bp. Hosius of Cordova to represent him at the Council of Nicaea (Nice) and that he built a basilica at the catacomb of Priscilla, perhaps also the church of S. Maria Antiqua at the Forum. He reorganized the discipline of the Roman Church, now no longer imprisoned in the Catacombs. He died on 31 Dec. 335, and was buried in the subterranean basilica of the cemetery of S. Priscilla. His remains were brought to S. Silvestro in Capite, 19 June, 761. Other parts of his body are in the crypt of S. Martino ai Monti (since the 9th century) and in the abbey church of Nonantula near Modena. F. (ancient) 31 Dec., Rom. Mart., dp. in the entire Latin Church. Over her former house on the Coelian Hill at Rome, in early times, a chapel was built in her honor. F. 3 Nov., Rom. Mart. Silvinus, regionary Bishop, of unknown ancestry (perhaps b. near Toulouse). He was a courtier of Childeric I and Thierry III and was married, but left his political career and was consecrated bishop at Rome, in 690. He preached the Gospel in Picardy, especially near Théroutanne. It is recorded of him that he spent his whole fortune in ransoming the Christians carried off into slavery by the neighboring barbarian tribes. Silvinus died about 718, at the monastery of Auxy-les-Moines, diocese of Arras, where he was elected patron. In the 9th century his relics were transferred to Heristal castle, in 951 to Saint-Omer (Saint-Bertin), and later on to Senlis. F. 17 Feb., Rom. Mart., dp. at Toulouse and Arras.—P. B.—Mg.

28 Feb., 1650. It is controverted whether or not these men were martyrs. In the 17th century very few martyrs' bodies were left in the catacombs; in fact nearly all of them had been taken away by Popes Paul and Paschal; the bodies found in the catacombs later on were mostly bodies of Christians who had died in peace after the persecution and were buried in the empty loculi of the martyrs.—Chev.—H. Simeon Stylites, the Elder, C.; b. in 390, in the village of Cesa (Sis, Cilicia), son of well-to-do Christian peasants. He herded the flocks of his father. By the words of Our Lord: "Blessed be the sorrowful" he was moved to leave the world and enter the monastery of Teleda. Disliked by his fellow monks for his strange ascetism, he went to Teleshin (412), had himself immured, during Lent, in the ruins of an old monastery, then built for himself a roofless hut on the nearby mountain, where he lived, chained to a rock. Soon he selected as abode a stone, three feet high, then some higher ones, until he was mounted on a column, 60 feet high, on which he spent the last 30 years of his life. The flat summit of the column was about three feet in diameter; he could stand, kneel or sit, but not lie down. His pillar stood on a hill on the boundary between Syria and Cilicia, and crowds of people from every walk of life thronged the enclosure in which it was erected, in order to ask the prayers of the Saint and to listen to his sermons. He is the first of the Oriental anchorites who chose the peculiar observance of living on a pillar (Stylites). It was his peculiar mission to impress and to convert by his most singular austerity the wild Arabian tribes of the desert and the mountains, who flocked around his pillar and were baptized by the thousands. "God needing these souls, called up St. Simeon to do the work and Simeon obeyed, and traversed perhaps the most awful path man has yet trod." (Baring-Gould). In the theological controversies of his age he defended the Council of Chalcedon. The Monophysites, however, contend that he held their theological views. Simeon died eight years after the Council of Chalcedon, on his column at Teleshin. He was buried at Antioch. Around his column, in the 5th century, was built a magnificent cathedral, a masterpiece of Byzantine art. A "Life" of S. Simeon was written by a disciple, named Antony, who was with him when he died; another by Theodoret, who knew him well. F. 5 Jan. Rom. Mart.; in the Greek and Syrian Churches 1 Sept. full office. Simeon Nemanja, ruler of Servia, founder of an independent, united Servia. He was a Catholic, attached to Pope Innocent III; he splendidly received Emperor Frederic I on his crusade and founded Studenitza and other Serbian establishments. After a reign of 38 years he resigned in favor of his son, S. Stephen, and retired to Studenitza, in 1195. In 1198, he went to Vatopedi on Mt. Athos, and in 1199, to Chilandari, which he had founded with his son S. Sabas for the Servian nation. D. 13 Feb., 1200. From his relics at Studenitza flows a miraculous liquid. Simeon, Bp. of Jerusalem, one of the 72 Disciples of Christ, son of Cleophas and Mary, the sister of the Mother of Jesus (John XIX, 25), therefore called "brother" of the Lord (Matth. XIII, 55; Mk. VI, 3). He was present at the Ascension and the Coming of the Holy Ghost (Acts I, 14). After the death of James (62 or 63) he was elected second bishop of Jerusalem by the Apostles, disciples and relatives of Christ. Disappointed by this election, Thebutis originated the first schism (Euseb., IV, 22, 5). Simeon probably took part in removing the Christian community from Jerusalem to Pella. It is doubtful if he ever returned to Jerusalem. Under the reign of Trajan, in 107, he was reported by Jewish heretics as a relative of the Lord, a scion of David and a Christian. After tortures, which lasted several days, he was crucified; perhaps, however, he died in peace. Kellner erroneously identifies him with the Apostle Simon Zelotes and says that he ruled the Church of Jerusalem from the year 60 to the destruction of the city. In the sanctuary at Emaus he is believed to have been one of the two disciples of Easter Monday. F. 18 Feb., Rom. Simeon, Theonas, and Phorbinus, Greek Mm. F. 4 Apr., MGr.

Simeon, C., bishop of Mytilene (an island in the Aegean Sea), 764–843. F. 7 Apr.—A. B. 18, 209.

Simeon, "the Barefooted," C., son of an Oriental priest; he led a hermit's life on Mt. Olympus in Thessaly and was elected abbot of Philotheu monastery on Mt. Athos; deposed through intrigues, he retired to Mt. Flamurios, near Zagora, where he lived under an apple tree. He never wore shoes. Having built the monastery of the Bl. Trinity, he went about evangelizing the poor in Epirus and Thessaly; era uncertain. D. at Constantinople and was buried at Chalcis, but the body was transferred to Mt. Flamurios. F. 19 Apr., Mz.

Simeon Barsabae, Bp., the priests Abdella (Abdhailha) and Ananias (Hannanja), Chuslazat (Guhashtazad, Usthasan, Gothazat), Pusai (Fusik), the latter's daughter Askirea, the eunuch Azad (Asatus), and 1150 (?) companions, Mm., on Good Friday, 44, under Shapur II. Simon was the son of a fuller and had been made coadjutor of his predecessor, Papas, in 316. He was accused of being a friend to the Roman Emperor and of keeping up secret correspondence with him. Therefore Shapur ordered the execution of all the Christian priests. Because Simeon refused to adore the sun, he was beheaded with his companions. F. 21 Apr., Rom. Mart.; in the Jacobite and Nestorian Churches, Friday after Easter; in the Syrian Church, 14 Apr. 3 cl.; in the Greek Church, full office, 17 Apr.; in the Melchite Church, 10 Apr.—Nill. I. 474.—Ruin., 584.—Pers. 5.—Wr. 30.—Melch.

* Simeon of Aleppo, a Jacobite saint. F. 3 May.—Jac., 287.

Simeon, Isaac, and Bachtisius, Mm., in Persia, beheaded under Shapur II. F. 15 May, Mrt.; 18 May, Mz.

Simeon, a priest, and another Simeon, a deacon, Mm., at Kaskhar; v. S. Abdas, 16 May.

Simeon, the Younger, "of the Wonderful Mountain," Stylite. B. at Antioch, in 521. His mother, Martha, obtained him by prayer and a vow to S. John the Baptist. He entered the monastery of S. John Stylites as a child and spent 69 years on various columns; on the last, on the Wonderful Mountain near Antioch, he stood for 45 years. D. in 596. He is patron of Syrian sailors. F. 3 Sept., Rom. Mart.; 24 May, full office in the Greek Church; in the Syrian Church, 21 May; in the Coptic Church, 24 May and 27 July. 30 ascetic treatises are ascribed to him by the Greeks, an apocalypse, letters, hymns, liturgical troparia, and prayers.—Ord., 144.—H. L.—Nill., II, 416.—Biogr.

Simeon of Treves, a recluse; b. at Syracuse, Sicily, of Greek parents; he studied at Constantinople; from there went to Palestine to serve as a guide for pilgrims. Having led a hermit's life on the Jordan, he took a monk's habit at Bethlehem, but after two years passed to the monastery on Mt. Sina. Sent to collect alms for the Holy Land in Normandy he followed Abbot Richard of S. Vannes to Lorraine. With Bishop Poppo of Treves he went to the Holy Land, but returned later to Treves, and, after 1028, lived as a recluse in a cell near the Porta Nigra. D. 1 June, 1035. He was canonized soon after his death by the efforts of Archbishop Poppo. His church at Treves was destroyed, in 1804. F. 1 June, Rom. Mart.; dp. at Treves and Syracuse; by the Latin Basilians, dp. maj.—Comm.—H. D.

* Simeon of Zaita (Zaita, Hebsenozay), Bp. of Carrhae (Haran), also called Bar Mondar of Habsenas (in Turabdin near Modiad in Mesopotamia). F. 3 June, Rb. Sl. He is identical with S. Simeon Abuh Korah, 3 Jan.—Jac. (1 June) 287.

Simeon, "the Sinaite," C., ascete, 5th century. F. 25 June, Mz.

Simeon Salus, C., a fool for Christ's sake. B. at Emesa in Syria. He went to Jerusalem with John (his brother?), with whom he later spent 28 years in the monastery of S. Gerasimus on the Red Sea. Then he returned to Emesa. In order to court derision and ill-treatment he affected the manners and way of speaking of an idiot, and thereby earned for himself the surname "Salus," which signifies "a fool." His life is strange and startling. He was still alive when Emesa was destroyed by an earthquake (in 1088); but the year of his death is unknown. F. 1 July, Rom. Mart.; in the Greek and Syrian Churches (with S. John), 21 July, full office; 7 Aug. in the Coptic Church.—H. L.—Rams.

Simeon, "the Husbandman," C. His relics are at Acuelo, diocese of Calahorra, in Castile, Spain. He is patron of farmers. F. 1 July.—H. L.

Simeon, M., at Sarmalas; v. S. John, 5 July.

* Simeon, 42d patriarch of Alexandria (Coptic), 689–701. B. in Syria; he was a monk at the monastery of S. Severus at Alexandria (Az-Zajaj). He left the administration of his diocese to John the Abbot, who had been appointed administrator by S. Isaac, the predecessor of Simeon. He raised a dead priest to life. His relics are at Az-Zajaj. F. 18 July.—Cal. Copt.

* Simeon, abbot of Caga, a Coptic saint, "who washed the feet of his Lord." F. 23 July.—Cal. Copt.

Simeon, C., hermit. He is said to have been a native of Armenia. On a pilgrimage (in 983) he visited Jerusalem, Rome, Compostella, and Tours. He settled in the Benedictine monastery at Padalirone, diocese of Mantua. D. 26 July, 1016. Canonized by Benedict VIII. F. 26 July, Rom. Mart., dp. 1 cl. oct. at Padalirone; dp. in the diocese of Mantua.—H. L.

Simeon, "of the Stable" (Mandra), Stylite, He lived on a column near Aegae in Cilicia, where he was killed by lightning. Perhaps he is identical with S. Simeon the Elder and 26 July is the anniversary of the dedication of his church at Anaplas, a suburb of Constantinople (Mrt.). F. 26 July, Mrt.; 27 July, Rb. Sl., and in the Melchite Church.

Simeon, Bp. of Edessa. F. 27 July, Rb. Sl.

* Simeon of Trebizond, M. He was tortured and hanged by the Turks at Constantinople, in 1653, for refusing to embrace Islamism. F. 14 Aug., Mz.

* Simeon of Werchoturje, C. He was a missionary amongst the Wogules in the government of Perm and in Siberia. D. in 1642. His relics are at Werchoturje since 12 Sept. 1704. F. 12 Sept., Mrt. Mz.

Simeon, M., in Armenia; v. S. Theonas, 30 Sept.

* Simeon, 51st Coptic patriarch of Alexandria. B. in Alexandria; he was a monk on Mt. Shibat, under Abba Jacob. He followed the Patriarch Marcus II to Alexandria and filled the see of Alexandria after Jacob, for five months and a half. F. 30 Sept. in the Coptic Church.—Syn., 55.

Simeon, "the Just," He is the devout old man in Jerusalem, who (Luke II, 25 ss.) at the Presentation of Christ in the Temple recognized the "Salvation of Israel" and pronounced the "Nunc dimittis" and the prophetic words to Mary. In the apocryphal gospel of Nicodemus, Simeon is called a high priest, but this statement deserves no credence. Nor can he be identified with Rabbai Simeon, the Father of Gamaliel, who was president of the Sanhedrim about 13 A. D. In the 6th century his relics were brought to Constantinople by Justin the Younger, from there to Zara in Dalmatia. F. 8 Oct., Rom. Mart., dp. 1 cl. oct. at Zara, dp. at Venice; Tr. rel. at Zara, 16 May, dp. In the Greek Church, 3 Feb. (with Anna), full office. The Eudists keep his F. 8 Oct. (formerly 3 Febr.) dp. maj.; at Jerusalem, 11 Oct.—C. E.—Buch.—Syn., 62.

Simeon and Theodore, Cc., monks and founders of the great monastery and pilgrimage of Megaspelion in Morea (Peloponnesus). F. at Megaspelion, 18 Oct., full office.—H. L.

Simeon "Metaphrastes," (i. e., the translator); the principal representative of Byzantine hagiography, second half of the 10th century. He was secretary of state to Emperor Romanus II (959–963). He owes his fame to his collection of legends (Menologium), undertaken at the request of Emperor Constantine Porphyrogenetes. Unfortunately Metaphrastes, looking more to the ethical than to the historical side of his work, instead of compiling the ancient acts and lives of the saints in their original form, rewrote and polished them, adding marvels and horrors from unreliable traditions. D. under Basil II. F. 27 Nov., Latin Mart.; 28 Nov., MGr.; 9 Nov., Mz.—C. E.—Buch.

* Simeon, "the Greek"; probably Simeon Kananaja, monk of Kartamin in Mesopotamia. F. 18 Nov., Rb. Sl.

Simeon "Afa Marjam," an Abyssinian saint. F. 2 Dec.—Cal. Copt.

Simeon, a hermit at Vauce, near Domfort (Orne), in France; he evangelized the Paysais. D. 7 Dec., about 850. F. 7 Dec.—P. B.

Simeon, founder of Karkaphta monastery, near Theodosiopolis, in Mesopotamia. F. 8 Dec., Rb. Sl.

* Simeon Behor, of Manuf in Upper Memphis, M., a monk, killed by the Moslem. F. 10 Dec., in the Coptic Church.—Syn., 181.

Simeon, Patriarch of Antioch. F. 16 Dec., Mrt.

* Simeon, C., in Abyssinia; v. S. Samuel, 19 Dec.

* Simeon, C., a Nestorian saint; b. at Khaskhar in Mesopotamia; he attached himself to S. Bar Edta, then led a solitary life on the river Jordan; by an angel he was transferred to Mt. Senna on the Tigris, where he founded a monastery; he suffered much from diabolical obsession. D. in the 6th century, 120 years old. His relics are at the monastery of Senna.—Nest., III, 46.

Simeon (B.), the 5th Abbot of Cava. Mem. 16 Nov. at Cava.

Simiberia, V., M., at Cologne; v. S. Panerida, 22 Oct.

Similianus (Sambin), third bishop of Nantes, 4th century. F. 16 June, dp. at Nantes. His "acts" are lost, but S. Gregory of Tours testifies to his sanctity.—Lob., I, 9.—Rams.

Similinus, a priest at Tours; v. S. Justinus, 17 Sept.

Simitrius, a priest, and 22 companions, Mm., at Rome. Simitrius was arrested in the house of S. Praxedis and beheaded with 2 other Christians, in 159. S. Praxedis buried them and collected their blood with a sponge, which is still preserved in the church of Santa Prassede. Their relics are scattered in various churches at Rome, in Malmedy abbey near Aachen, and at Stavetot. F. 26 May, Rom. Mart.; in the church of S. Pudentiana, Rome, 28 May, dp. Tr. rel. to Stavetot Abbey, Belgium, 9 May.—Comm.

Simon, a Greek M.; v. S. Paul, 3 Feb.

Simon of Trent, M., said to have been cruelly tortured and killed at the age of 2 years and five months by Jews, for ritual purposes, on Maundy Thursday, 23 March, 1475. The confession of the Jews was obtained by torture and is consequently of no value. The trial was revised and approved at Rome by Sixtus IV, 20 June, 1478. There is evidence to support at least some of the accusations of crimes of superstitious zeal brought against the Jews throughout Europe during the latter Middle Ages. F. 24 March, Rom. Mart.; at Trent, dp. maj. 4th Sunday after Easter.—Freim., 17.—H. L.

* Simon, C., Bp. of Suzdal, Russia. He was a monk at Kiev and abbot of Roshdeswinski monastery at Wladimir. In 1215, he was elected bishop of Wladimir and Suzdal. D. in 1226, at Kiev. He wrote the Lives of the early Fathers of Kiev. F. 10 May, Mz. Mrt.

Simon Stock ("the Englishman"), C., O. Carm., the sixth and best known General of the Carmelite Order. B. at Aylesford (Harford Castle) in Kent, England. When 12 years of age, he took up his abode in the hollow trunk of an oak tree, whence he was nicknamed "Simon of the Stock." He spent 10 years there, until, in 1240, he joined the Carmelites at Aylesford. In 1247, he was elected General of the Order. Notwithstanding his great age, he showed remarkable energy; he founded houses in many university cities: in 1248 at Cambridge, in 1253 at Oxford, in 1260 at Paris and Bologna. During his administration a new rule was adopted for the European houses. The Mother of God is said to have given to his Order the Scapular, appearing to Simon at Cambridge, 16 July, 1251; but the older Carmelite chronicles do not mention this legend. D. at Bordeaux, 16 May, 1265. His relics are in the cathedral of Bordeaux. His F. was granted for Bordeaux, 10 May, by Nicolas III and extended to the Carmelites by Paul V. Now, 16 May dp. 2 cl., O. Carm.; at Bordeaux, 17 May.—Ord., II, 642.—St.—L. S.—Angl.—Red., 202.

* Simon Wolomski, M. Originally a tailor; he took the habit of S. Basil at Pinega, government of Wologda, and founded Woloma monastery, 75 wersts from Ustjug, on the Kitshmenga River. He was killed by robbers, in 1641. F. 12 June, Mz. Mrt.

Simon, a hermit, venerated by the Greeks; he lived in an old tomb. F. 25 June, Mrt.

Simon, Abraham, Ma'na, and companions, Mm., at Bet-Titta, near Karka in Mesopotamia; their eyes were pierced with red hot nails; at last they were shot with arrows, 27 Aug., 447.—Pers.

Simon, count of Crépy-en-Valois, C., O. S. B. B. in castle Crépy (Oise) in 1048. He was a relative of Mathilde, wife of William the Conqueror, and educated at William's court. In 1070, he became a monk at Saint-Claude. In 1080, he was called to Rome by Gregory VII, to mediate between him and King Robert of Apulia. D. at Rome, 18 Sept., 1071. His relics are at Bar-sur-Aube. F. 30 Sept.; 25 Sept. dp. at Saint-Claude.—P. B.—Mg.

Simon, the Pharisee, in whose house S. Mary Magdalen received the remission of her sins. His alleged relics are at Cologne in the church of S. Maria in Capitolio. F. 8 Oct.—Buch. Gel.

Simon Zelotes, Apostle. In the Gospels he is named only in the catalogues of the Apostles. His surname is "the Canaanite," i. e., the Zealot. He belonged to the Jewish faction, which was conspicuous for fierce advocacy of the Mosaic Law. Misunderstanding his surname, Jerome and others say that he was born at Cana in Galilee. The Greeks, Copts, etc., identify him with Nathanael of Cana and with the bridegroom at the marriage feast of Cana. Kellner and the Abyssinians identify him with Simeon, bishop of Jerusalem (60-83?), who was crucified after having preached the Gospel in Samaria. The Greeks claim that he preached on the shores of the Black Sea, in Egypt, and in Britain; the Latins and Armenians, in Persia. It is equally uncertain where he died and whether he died a martyr's death. He may have died in peace at Edessa. The Latins say he was martyred at Sianir, in Colchis, but according to the Armenian, Moses of Chorene, he was killed at Veriosphora in Iberia. His tomb is unknown. His relics are said to have been brought to S. Peter's, in Rome, in the 7th or 8th century, together with those of S. Jude; other relics are at Toulouse. F. 28 Oct. dp. 2 cl. in the Latin Church (deposition in S. Peter's.) Simon and Jude were patrons of the, now destroyed, collegiate church at Goslar. At Saint-Sernin, Toulouse, 26 Jan., Elevation of the relics of Ss. Simon and Jude. F. of S. Simon in the Greek Church, 10 May, full office (also in the Syrian Church); in the Coptic Church, 15 May. A., and at Norcia.—Seeb., 298.—Off. pr.

Simon Rinalducci (B.), of Todi, C., O. S. A. Born at Todi; he took the habit in 1280, and became a great orator and, for a time, provincial of Umbria. D. at Bologna, 20 Apr., 1322. F. 20 Apr. dp. O. S. A. and at Bologna.—Off. pr.

Simon of Lipnica (B.), C., O. F. M.; b. at Lipnica in Poland; converted by the sermons of S. John Capistran, he took the habit of S. Francis. He was a great orator and in his sermons spread the devotion to the Holy Name. D., serving the sick during a plague, at Cracow, 18 July, 1482. Beatified in 1685. F. 30 July dp., O. F. M.; 18 July in Poland and Galicia.—H. L.—Auss.

Simon Kiota (B.), M.; a Japanese gentleman of one of the old Christian families of Bungo. He was an officer in the army of the king of Bungo, but became a catechist for the Jesuits and a member of the Confraternity of the Holy Rosary. Sixty years old he was crucified with his wife and three companions at Cocura, 16 Aug., 1625. Beatified, 6 July 1867.—Jap.—Seeb.

Simon de Rojas (B.), C.; b. at Valladolid in 1552. He took the Trinitarian habit and became superior of his Order. He founded the confraternity of the "Ave Maria," was a great missionary and confessor to Queen Isabella, tutor of the children of King Philip III. He composed an office for the feast of the Holy Name of Mary. D. at Madrid, 2 Sept., 1624. F. 28 Sept. O. SS. Trinit. and at Madrid; at Valladolid, 22 Sept. dp.—H. L.

Siricius, M., at Atriumetum; v. S. Verulus, 21 Feb.

Siricius, Pope, C.; b. at Rome, in 334; he succeeded S. Damasus, 17 Dec., 384. His pontificate was important for the development of the Roman primacy. Conscious of the "solicitude for all the churches," he issued many general decrees on questions of ecclesiastical discipline and liturgy. His letter to Bishop Himerius of Taragona (10 Feb., 385) prohibits the repetition of Arian baptism and solemn baptism on the feasts of Easter and Pentecost; it mitigates the practice of penance, gives laws regarding the age required for ordination, against violators of monastic chastity, enforces celibacy, etc. This letter is the most ancient papal decretal extant. In 386, he held a synod at Rome, the canons of which he sent to the African bishops (prohibition to consecrate bishops without permission from the Holy See, sacerdotal celibacy, etc.) To strengthen the connection of Illyria with the Latin Church, he founded the Apostolic vicariate of Thessalonica. In 392, he condemned Jovinian; in 390, he dedicated the Basilica of S. Paul on the Way to Ostia. D. 26 Nov., 399; buried in the cemetery of S. Priscilla; his relics are now in S. Prassede. Sixtus, M., at Celran; v. S. Eovaldus, 17 July.

Sixtus (Xystus) II, M., Pope, 31 Aug., 257 to 6 Aug., 258. B. in Athens (?), Greece. He took a conciliatory position in the dispute over the rebaptism of converted heretics. He was arrested in the catacomb of Praetextatus during the divine liturgy, and beheaded at the entrance of the catacomb of Callistus. With him died: Januarius, Vincentius, Magnus, Stephanus, and the deacons Quartus, Felicissimus, and Agapitus. Four days later his archdeacon Lawrence was executed. The pathetic meeting between Sixtus and Lawrence is probably a mere legend. S. was buried in the catacomb "in Praetextato." He is the most highly venerated among the ancient martyr popes. His body is partly at S. Sisto Vetere. F. 6 Aug., Rom. Mart., simpl. in the entire Latin Church (very ancient), at Rome, Tortona and Athens dp. 9 Aug.; MGR. 10 Aug.; in the Coptic Church, 26 March; at Pisa, minor patron, 7 Aug. dp. 2 cl. Sophia and her three daughters: Pistis (Fides or Faith), Elpis (Spes or Hope), and Agape (Charitas or Charity), Mm. The "acts" of these martyrs are spurious. The beginnings of their legend are not sufficiently sifted, but it contains an historical nucleus. Some authors, however, believe that they are entirely mythical persons and originated in the dedication of the Great Church at Constantinople, the Hagia Sophia (Eternal Wisdom,—Faith, Hope and Charity being the fruit or offspring of Wisdom). According to the legend which localizes the story at Rome, the Widow Sophia lived at Rome, under Hadrian; Fides, aged 12, was beaten, thrown into molten pitch and beheaded; Spes, aged 10, and Charitas, aged 9, were cast into a furnace, but, being unhurt by the flames, were decapitated. Last of all Sapientia (Sophia) was executed, or died, praying at the bier of her daughters, in 139. Their tomb was at Rome on the Aurelian Way. Their cult, however, originated in the Orient. Allard distinguishes the Oriental saints from Ss. Sophia, Fides, Spes, and Charitas, buried on the Via Aurelia. Relics of them are at S. Peter's and S. Silvester's, Rome. F. of S. Sophia, 30 Sept., Rom. Mart.; the daughters: 1 Aug., Rom. Mart.; in the Greek Church, full office of all four, 17 Sept. End of the Middle Ages, F. in many dioceses of Germany, Poland, and Hungary, 15 May, or 1 July (at Halle: holyday of obligation, 15 May). In the Brev. of Strasbourg (15th century), 10 May (Tr. rel. to Eschau in Alsace)—L. S.—C. E.—Buch.—Syn., 270 (25 Jan.)

Sophia, M., baptized by the bishop of Memphis, tortured and beheaded with her daughters Barnaba and Axosia. Her relics, according to a Coptic tradition, were brought to Constantinople, for which reason she is called "the precious stone of New Rome." F. 2 Sept., full office in the Coptic Church; Tr. rel. to Constantinople, 30 Aug. The story may be the Coptic version of the story of the above-mentioned saints.—Cal. Copt.—Syn., 10.

Sophia, matron, M. Her relics, in pre-Reformation times, were at Minden in Westphalia. F. 3 Sept. (one lesson).—Grot.

Sophia, V., M. F. 17 Sept. at Corsano, diocese of Ugento, Apulia. She is a local saint, whose feast was assigned to 17 Sept., the anniversary of S. Sophia, the Widow.

Sophia and Irene, Mm., beheaded in Egypt under Emperor Claudius. F. 18 Sept., Rom. Mart., MGr., Mz.

Sophia, V., M., at Sortino in Sicily. F. 23 Sept.—H. L.

Sophia of Edessa, mother of S. Euphemia. F. 5 Nov., Syr. Men., Rb. Sl.

Sophia, abbess, and 50 nuns, Mm., at Edessa in Syria. They were slain by soldiers of Julian the Apostate. F. 6 Nov., in the Coptic Church.—Syn., 109.

Sophia, "the Wonder Worker," a Greek saint. F. 18 Dec., MGr.

Sophia, V., M., of the mythical circle of S. Ursula; her relics are in the cathedral of Prague. F. 31 Dec.—Gel.

Sophia (B.) = B. Magdalen Sophia Barat. F. 25 June at Sens.

"Sophianis," In. 40 Martyrs are mentioned in some Greek Menaea, 3 Dec., Mrt.

* Sophonias, abbot of Kartamin in Mesopotamia, who "imposed upon himself the rule never to speak." F. 29 Apr., Rb. Sl.

Sophonias (Zephaniah), the ninth of the Lesser Prophets; perhaps a descendant of King Ezechias. B. at Sabaroth, of the tribe of Simeon. He prophesied during the reign of Josias, before the invasion of the Scythians, in 630 B.C. He foretold the judgments of God upon Jerusalem, but also the ultimate conversion of the Jews. F. 3 Dec., Rom. Mart., full office in the Greek Church; 5 Dec. sem. in Jerusalem (Lat.); 28 June in the Coptic Church.—Scher., 67.—C. E.

Sophoreus, a Coptic saint. F. 28 Feb., Cal. Copt.

Sophronius, M., in Palestine; v. S. Silvester, 1 March.

Sophronius, patriarch of Jerusalem, C. B. at Damascus, about 560; with John Moschus he made long journeys through Palestine, to Egypt, Rome, and Asia Minor. He probably took a monk's habit in Egypt, about 580. For a time he lived on the Jordan with John Moschus, then at the laura of S. Sabas, after 616 in the monastery of S. Theodosius, near Jerusalem. In 634, he was elected patriarch of Jerusalem. As such he was the champion of the Church against Monotheletism; in his inthronization pastoral he convincingly explains the doctrine of the two wills and the two energies. The end of his life was saddened by the irruption of the Saracens and the conquest of Jerusalem by Caliph Omar, in 637. His last Christmas sermon, preached when the Mohammedans had already laid siege to Jerusalem, and the Christians could not, according to custom, go out to keep the festival at Bethlehem, is very touching. When the Holy City was taken by the infidels; Sophronius fled to his friend, S. John the Almsgiver, Melchite patriarch of Alexandria, where he died, 11 March, 638. He is eminent as a theologian (called "the Sophist"), hagiographer, preacher, and liturgical poet. F. 11 March, Rom. Mart. dp. at Jerusalem. The Greeks give him the full office of the day.—C. E.—L. S.—Rams.

* Sophronius, M.; b. at Penkowz, near Sofia, in Bulgaria; he was a monk at Rusa on the Danube, and was killed by his servant, in 1510. His body was found incorrupt in 1512. F. 28 May, Mz.

Sophronius, a monk at Mt. Mela; v. S. Barnabas, 18 Aug.

Sophronius of Shanazum (Shenetom near Luxor) and Dalasina, Mm., in Egypt. They were done to death at Luxor, by order of Arrhianus, under Diocletian. F. 16 Nov. Eg. 95.

Sophronius, an alleged Bp. of Cyprus, 6th century, successor of S. Damianus; he is not found in the list of Cypriot saints. F. 8 Dec., Rom. Mart., MGr., Mz.

Soranus = S. Suranus.

Sortia, C. F. 25 May, at Blera, diocese of Viterbo, dp. maj.—Arch.

Sorus (Sour), hermit and abbot. B. in Auvergne, in 501. With his disciple, Cyprian, he retired to Genouillac monastery, in the diocese of Cahors; from there he went to Peure-Devade, and at last, about 525, to Terrasson in the diocese of Périgueux, where he founded a monastery. D. 1 Feb., about 580. F. 1 Feb. in the dioceses of Périgueux, Limoges, and Sarlat.—P. B.—Mg.

Sosipater, a kinsman and disciple of the Apostles and a relative of S. Paul (Rom. XVI, 21). He is probably identical with S. Sopater of Berrhoea, who accompanied the Apostle from Greece to Asia Minor on his third journey (Acts XX, 4). According to the Greek tradition, he was bishop of Iconium; with Jason he is said to have founded the church of Corfu. F., with Jason, 25 June, Rom. Mart. dp. maj. on the isle of Coreyra; dp. at Smyrna; in the Greek Church, full office, 29 Apr.—Comm.—Scher.

Sosipatra (Sopatra), V., daughter of Emperor Mauricius; v. S. Eustolia, 9 Nov.

Sositheus, M.; v. S. Isaac, 10 Dec.

Sositheus, Narses, and Isaacius, MM., beheaded in Persia. F. 9 Dec., Mz.

Sosius (Sossius), M., deacon of the Church of Misenum (now destroyed), west of Naples. He was arrested and incarcerated at Pozzuoli, where S. Januarius of Naples visited and comforted him. He was beheaded near the Solfatara (with S. Januarius and companions), in 305. His connection with S. Januarius may be legendary. A magnificent church was built in his honor at Miseno, of which town he was princ. patron. F. 23 Sept., Rom. Mart.; at Pozzuoli, dp. maj.; at Naples, dp. The Latin Church celebrates him, with S. Januarius, 19 Sept. In the diocese of Aversa, 23 Sept. dp. Tr. rel. 31 May at Fratta, diocese of Aversa; Patronage, 13

Sept. at Cardeto, diocese of Aversa.—H. L.—Off. pr.—Arch.

Sosthenes Gherardino dei Sostegni, C., one of the Seven Founders of the Servite Order. B. at Florence of a noble family; he left the world with his companions, 8 Sept., 1233; he was appointed provincial of the Umbrian monasteries and Vicar General to S. Philip Benizi, whom he accompanied to France and Germany. D. on Mte. Senario, 3 May, 1282; v. Seven Founders. F. simpl. 3 May, O. S.—Serv., 113.

Sosthenes and Jectras, Coptic saints. F. 6 May, Cal. Copt.

Sosthenes and Victor, Mm., at Chalcedon, opposite Constantinople. They were amongst the executioners appointed to torture S. Euphemia, but were converted to Christianity through her prayers and preceded her in martyrdom; they were burnt alive at the stake. F. 11 Sept., Rom. Mart.; at Montepeloso (Lucania). S. Sosthenes alone, dp.; at S. Sostene, diocese of Squillace. S. Sosthenes is Princ. Patron, 10 Sept.—P. B.

Sosthenes, a disciple of S. Paul; ruler of the synagogue at Corinth (Acts XVIII, 17), probably the successor of S. Crispus. When Gallio refused to judge S. Paul, the bystanders laid hands on Sosthenes and beat him. Perhaps he is identical with the Sosthenes who assisted S. Paul in writing to the Corinthians (1 Cor. I, 1). The Greeks claim that he was bishop of Colophon in Asia Minor. It seems, however, that Sosthenes, the ruler of the synagogue, represented the anti-Christian party of Corinth. F. 28 Nov., Rom. Mart. The Greeks commemorate Sosthenes, Apollo, Cephas, Tychicus, Epaphroditus, Caesarius, and Onesiphorus, on 29 March and 8 Dec.—Buch.—Schem.

Sostratus, M., at Constantinople; v. S. Euphemia, 3 July.

Sostratus, Hesperius, and Glycerius (deacon), of the ancient martyrs of Antioch. F. 8 June, Old Syr. Mart. Later martyrologies add: Heraclius, Primolius, Quartus, and Cilianus; but these martyrs seem to belong to other cycles. S. Glycerius has a feast of his own at Nicomedia, 14 Jan.—Achel., 39.—H. L.

Soter, M., Pope, 166–174. B. at Fondi, near Gaëta in Central Italy. He wrote a letter to the Church of Corinth to console the martyrs; this letter is lost, but we possess fragments of the answer of S. Dionysius. Soter also wrote an encyclical against the Montanists of Africa. Nothing else is known of his life. D. a martyr. Under Sergius II, his relics were brought to S. Maria ai Monti. F. 22 Apr., Rom. Mart., sem. in the Latin Church; at Rome dp.; at Fondi (minor patron), dp. maj.—Biogr.—C. E.—Buch.

Soter, M., at Treves; v. S. Palmatius, 5 Oct.

Soter, M.; v. S. Maxentius, 12 Dec.

Sotericus, M.; v. S. Marcus, 24 Oct.

Soteris = S. Zuwarda, 10 Feb.

Soteris, a Roman M., great-grandmother of S. Ambrose. It seems she was tortured when a virgin, under Decius, in 251, but martyred as a matron, under Diocletian, in 304. Pope Symmachus brought her body from the cemetery of S. Soteris (S. Callisto) to S. Silvestro; Sergius II, to S. Martino ai Monti. Since the 7th century she is considered a virgin, perhaps sister to the great-grandmother of S. Ambrose. F. 10 Feb., Rom. Mart., solemn at Milan; 14 Feb. at Perugia; in S. M. Nova, where her body is believed to be, dp.—Ruin., 411.—H. L.—R. Sott. 197.—Dand., II, 197.

Sothea, V., honored at Autun. F. 1 Apr.—P. B.

Sothnode = S. Artaldus.

Soussin = S. Celsinus, 25 Oct.

Sozon, C.; thrown into the fire at Nicomedia, he remained unhurt; d. in peace. F. 7 Aug., MGr.

Sozon (Tarasius), M. He was a shepherd boy, a native of Cilicia. At a pagan feast, at Pompejopolis, he pulled off the gold band of an idol, broke it and distributed the pieces amongst the poor. He was arrested and died under torture, in 304. F. 7 Sept., Rom. Mart., full office in the Greek Church.—Rb. Sl.—H. L.

Sozontas, a shepherd, martyred in Cyprus under Abubekr.—H. L.

Spacius (Space, Espes), M.; b. at Bayeux in Normandy; he was killed with many others at Andelys, diocese of Evreux, during the persecution of Julian the Apostate, about 362. His relics were dispersed in the 16th century. F. 10 Nov. dp. at Bayeux.—H. L.—Mg.

Spain. The Guardian Angel of Spain before 1914 had a feast in every Spanish diocese: at Toledo, Taragona, Lugo, Tortosa, Barcelona, Salamanca, Leon, Jaen, Cadiz, Granada, Oviedo, etc., on Oct. 1.; at Valladolid, Burgos, Madrid, Pampluna, etc., on March 1; at Seville, on the 4th Sunday in Sept.

Spanus (Espain), Lupicinus, Benignus, Beatus, Marcellinus Messapius, Genitor, Principianus, and Tridorius, brothers, Mm. They were sons of S. Maura and were baptized by S. Martin of Tours. Their relics are at the abbey of Plancy (v. S. Genitor). F. 25 Oct.; at Tours and Bourges, dp. 27 Oct.—P. B.

Speciosa, V., M., at Antioch; v. S. Prodocia, 11 July.

Speciosa, V., a sister of S. Epiphanius (Bp. of Pavia), and of Ss. Luminosa, Honorata, and Liberata. She made the vow of virginity when quite young and obtained from God the death of her groom. D. 80 years old. Part of her relics are at Hildesheim. F. 15 Oct., end of Middle Ages at Hildesheim and Minden.—Grot.—H. L.

Speciosus, C.; b. at Rome; he was one of the first Benedictine monks, a disciple of S. Benedict and, with his brother Gregory, a monk near Terracina on the coast of the Mediterranean; d. near Capua, in 545 (Greg., Dial., I, 8): F. 15 March, Rom. Mart.—Comm.

Sperandea, V., said to have been a relative (sister?) of S. Ubaldus of Gubbio. B. at Gubbio, in 1216; from her earliest youth she was guided by the grace of God in a miraculous manner; given to works of penance, she left home and lived in solitude at various places. In 1265, she founded the convent of S. Michael at Cingoli. D. in 1276. Her relics were found in 1497. Her cult was approved in 1633. F. 11 Sept., dp. 2 cl. (co-patron of the city), at Cingoli, dp. at Recanati and Sanseverino; dp. at Osimo, Gubbio, and San Severino.—H. L.—Off. pr.—F. J.

Speratus, Narzales, Cittinus, Veturius, Felix, Acyllinus, Laetantius, Januaria, Generosa, Vestina, Donata, and Secunda, the celebrated "Scillitan Martyrs." Arrested at Scilla, in proconsular Africa, they were brought to Carthage (not to Cartagena in Spain) and, after two trials, beheaded, 17 July, 180, by order of Vigellius, the first persecutor of Christians in Northwestern Africa. Their "acts" are genuine. A church was dedicated to them at Carthage. Their relics were dispersed during the Vandal persecutions. Some are at Rome, in Ss. John and Paul. The Spaniards unjustly claim that these martyrs died in Cartagena. F. 17 July, Rom. Mart., dp. maj. (Pmp.) at Squillace, Calabria; full office in the Visigoth Brev.; dp. in the prov. of Carthage and at Rome in Ss. John and Paul.—All., 239.—Lins., 105.—Passions, 60, 401.

Speria (Exuperia), V., M., at Cahors. Her legend relates that she was b. at Ste. Cerene castle (now S. Céré); to escape from marriage she fled to the solitude of Leyme, where she lived in a hollow tree; after three months she was found by her brother and bridegroom and slain by them, 12 Oct., 760. F. 12 Oct. dp. at Cahors.—P. B.—Mg.

Sperus (Hesperus), Bp. of Metz, C.; he was present at the synod of Clermont, in 535. D. 22 Nov., 538. F. 22 Nov. (23 Aug.).—P. B.

Spes, V., M. F. 4th Sunday in June, in the church of S. Theodore at Rome.—Archiv.

Speus, Bp., M., (or C.?), a saint of doubtful identity, whose relics were transferred from the cathedral of Aix-la-Chapelle to the Harzburg in Saxony. F. 28 Jan.—H. L.

Speus (Spes), abbot. He built a monastery at Campi in the diocese of Norcia (Central Italy), in 471; for 40 years he was totally blind; 15 days before his death his eyesight was restored to him. D. in 513. F. 28 March, Rom. Mart., dp. at Norcia in the abbey of S. Eutitius, Norcia, 29 March, dp. maj. (minor patron); at Saccoveccia, 2 Sept. (princ. patron) dp. 1 cl. oct.; 29 March dp. at Spoleto.—H. L.

Speus, C., Bp. of Spoleto, about 420–445. F. 27 Nov. dp. at Spoleto.—H. L.

Speusippus, Eleusippus, and Melasippus, (Meleusippus), brothers ("the Holy Triplet"), their grandmother Leonilla (Neonilla), Neon and Turbon and Jonilla, Mm., in Cappadocia. The three brothers (boys) were instructed by their grandmother and were burnt alive for having destroyed idols, about 274; Neon (stoned) and Turbon were registrars; Leonilla was beheaded; Jonilla, a woman who was converted by the fortitude of the three boys, was hung up by her hair. Their relics were brought to Langres in Burgundy under Emperor Zeno; from there, in the 8th century, at least partly, to the abbey of Ellwangen, Suabia. The tradition of Langres says that these martyrs lived and died at Langres; but their connection with S. Benignus, the Apostle of Burgundy, is purely fictitious. Their relics were found amongst the ruins of the abbey of Ellwangen, in 1100, and again elevated in 1662. F. 17 Jan., Rom. Mart. at Ellwangen (1631) dp. 2 cl. oct.; at Dijon simpl.; at Langres 17 Jan. dp. 2 cl. dp.; 16 Jan. MGr. Mz. At S. Etienne, Dijon and at Langres, 18 Sept. Finding of rel. (1675) Chr. Leg., 143.—Leg. St., 90—P. B.—Comm.

Spinella, M., at Rome; v. S. Felix, 27 June.

Spinulus, a monk at Moyaen-Moutiers and later abbot of Begon-Celle (S. Blasien), disciple of S. Hidulph of Treves, 7th century. S. Hidulph buried him at Moyaen-Moutiers; his relics were brought to Belval near Chatel-sur-Moselle, 12th century. F. 1 Aug. (11 June).—P. B.—Mg.

Spire = S. Exuperius of Bayeux.

* Spiridion, Bp., C., patriarch of Servia. When S. Ephrem resigned and retired into the monastery of S. Michael (about 1385), Spiridion was elected, but died after nine years, about 1394. He is called the "Spiritual Trombone," because he composed many hymns. F. 30 Aug. in the Servian Church.—Mz. Mrt.

* Spiridion, C., a monk in the Petsherskoi monastery at Kiev, Russia; he had been a husbandman; he miraculously learned by heart the psalter and recited it daily; 12th century. F. 31 Oct., Mz. Mrt.

Spiridion, Archbp. of Tremithus (Trimittunda) on Cyprus, 4th century. He was a shepherd before he was made bishop. During the persecution of Maximinian he was blinded and mutilated and sent into the mines. At the Nicene Council (325) he defended the Apostolic faith against the Arians with earnestness and simplicity. Many marvellous stories are told of him. The Greek Church venerates him as one of her wonder workers. His relics were brought from Cyprus to Constantinople, from there, in the 15th century, to the isle of Corfu. F. 14 Dec., Rom. Mart. In the Greek Church, 12 Dec., full office. On the isles of Corfu, Zakynthos, and Cephalonia he is princ. patron, 12 Dec. dp. 1 cl. oct.—Hack.—Red., 484.—Cypr.—H. L.—C. E.

Spisinna, M., in Africa; v. S. Januaria, 8 June.

Sponsa, V., M. Her relics are at the abbey of Notre Dame aux Bois, O. Cist., in France. She is said to belong to the circle of S. Ursula. F. 13 (12) July.

Sponsaria, V., M., in Gaul; v. S. Elenara, 2 May.

Sporog, an Irish virgin, daughter of Colum. F. 30 June.—O'H., VI, 831.

Spur, abbot at Vavaillon in the Venaissin; his relics are at Chalon-sur-Saône. F. 16 Jan.—P. B.

Stabilis (Stable), C., Bp. of Clermont-Ferrand, 823-860. F. 1 Jan.—P. B.

Stachys, a disciple of S. Paul (Rom. XVI, 9), residing at Rome. He is said to have been the first bishop of Argyropolis or Byzantium and a companion of S. Andrew. This opinion supposes that S. Andrew preached at Byzantium, which is, however, improbable. The Syrian tradition says that Stachys was incarcerated at Tarsus with Olympas and Stephanas and died in prison. F. 31 Oct., Rom. Mart. dp. at Constantinople and in the Syrian and Greek Churches.—C. E.—Buch.—Schem.

Stacteus, M., on the road to Tivoli; v. S. Crescens, 27 June.

Stacteus and Turturinus, Roman Mm. F. 28 Sept., Rom. Mart. Their relics were brought to Fulda, Germany, in 836.—H. L.

Stadiola = S. Eustadiola, 8 June.

Stamati, M., b. at Bol in Thessaly. He was accused of having professed Islamism and to have returned to Christianity and was killed at Constantinople by the Turks for professing Christ. F. 16 Aug., Mz.

Stanislas, C., Canon Regular at Casimirz, a suburb of Cracow, where he was born, in 1439. He was preacher, lector and subprior in his Order. D. 3 May, 1489.—H. L.

Stanislas, M., Bp. of Cracow. B. at Szezczepanow, diocese of Cracow. He was educated at Gnesen and Paris and was a priest and preacher at the cathedral of Cracow. In 1072, he was elected bishop to succeed Lambert Zula. As his admonitions reproving the cruel and dissolute King Boleslas II Smialy proved fruitless, he excommunicated him and suspended public services. In reply Boleslas, in S. Michael's church, before the gates of the city, split the head of Stanislas with his sword, 8 May, 1079. After this Pope Gregory VII pronounced the interdict over Poland. In 1081, Boleslas was deposed and died a fugitive in Hungary, in 1083. The body of S. Stanislas was brought to the cathedral, 27 Sept., 1088. He was canonized, 17 Sept., 1253. His "Life" is unreliable in some respects. F. 7 May, Rom. Mart. dp. in the Latin Church; in Poland and Galicia, 8 May (princ. patron of Cracow) dp. 1 cl. oct.; dp. maj. in Silesia. Tr. rel., 27 Sept. dp. in Poland.—Comm.—H. L.

Stanislas Kostka, C., S. J.; b. 28 Oct., 1550, at Rostkovo in Massovia, Poland of one of the first Polish families. In 1563, he was sent to Vienna with his brother Paul to study at the College of the Jesuits. There he suffered persecution from his own brother and from the Lutherans, with whom the latter was connected. After a severe illness, during which he believed he received Holy Communion from the hands of S. Barbara, he resolved to join the Society of Jesus, and, as the Austrian Jesuits did not dare to receive him, fled to Augsburg, in August, 1567. In September, B. Peter Canisius sent him to Rome, where he was received into the novitiate by S. Francis Borgia, 28 Oct., 1567. Distinguished by purity and innocence, the spirit of penance and of fortitude in following his vocation, he died at Rome, 15 Aug., 1568, when still a novice. Many supernatural favors were bestowed upon the innocent youth by Almighty God and he is held in universal veneration throughout the Catholic world. His body is in S. Andrea in Quirinale. Beatified, 1605; canonized, in 1726. F. 15 Aug. and 13 Nov., Rom. Mart.; S. J. dp. 2 cl.; in Poland (minor patron), dp. 2 cl.; dp. in most dioceses up to the reform of 1913.—C. E.—Buch.—W.W.

Stapinus (Stamp) of Dourgne, C., alleged bishop of Carcassonne, France, in the 7th or 8th century. B. at Dourgne, diocese of Lavaur, where he is honored; other places famous for his cult are: Carcassonne, Ventonac, diocese of Carcassonne, and Anhee, near Dinant (Belgium). He is patron against gout. F. 6 Aug.—P. B.—Mg.

Stephen of Muret (Thiers), founder of the distinguished Order of Grammont. B. in 1046; he was the only son of the Vicomte de Thiers. When, at the age of 12, he accompanied his father on a pilgrimage to the tomb of S. Nicolas at Bari, he fell sick at Benevento. Archbishop Milo received the boy into his house and educated him. After Milo's death he joined a community of Benedictine hermits in Calabria. Authorized by Pope Gregory VII, he retired into the solitude of Muret, diocese of Limoges (1076). There he gathered a number of disciples and (1077) founded an institute similar to the one he had frequented in Calabria. The foundation of his rule was that of S. Benedict. Having guided his Order as "Corrector" for 47 years, he died at Muret, 8 Feb., 1124. He was canonized, 30 Aug., 1189. After his death his monks removed to Grammont. The Order perished during the French Revolution. F. 8 Feb., Rom. Mart; at Grammont (Brev., 1646), dp. 1 cl. oct.; Tr. rel. 25 June dp. maj. F. of his Canonization, 30 Aug. dp. 1 cl.—Ord., I, 415.—P. Stephen, "the Wonder Worker," abbot of the monastery of Triglia near Constantinople. The Iconoclast Emperor Leo the Armenian sent him into exile, where he died, in 816. F. 26 March, MGr.

Stephen Xylinites, a saint from the suburbs of Constantinople. F. 26 March, MGr.

Stephen, Abbot, and Hildebrand, monk, of the Cistercian Order, were done to death by the Albigenes at Saint-Gilles, Languedoc, in 1209. F. 11 Apr.—P. B.

Stephen Harding, third abbot of Cîteaux. B. at Sherborne, Dorsetshire, England, and educated at the Sherborne monastery, at Paris and Rome. When about to return to England, he took the habit of S. Benedict at Molesme, France, and as secretary to S. Robert (with the prior, S. Alberic), became the leading spirit of the reform which was effected at Cîteaux. The principle of the monastic life of the Cistercians is the observance to the letter of the ancient rule of St. Benedict, variously interpreted in other monasteries of the Order. Elected abbot of Cîteaux (1109), he insisted on the rigorous observance of the vow of poverty. He gave the habit to S. Bernard, in 1112. By his celebrated "Charta Caritatis" (1119) he gave to the Cistercian reform a firm organization and obtained papal approval of the Order, 23 Dec., 1119. He is the first historian of Cîteaux (Exordium Cisterciensis Coenobii). He resigned in 1133. D. 28 March, 1134. His cult was approved in 1623. F. 17 Apr. dp. maj. O. Cist. and dp. at Dijon.—Ord., 423.—St.—L. S.

Stephen I, patriarch of Antioch. He was elected in 478, after Peter Fullo had been sent into exile. He was driven away for a time and accused of Nestorianism by the Monophysites, but restored by the synod of Laodicea. The partisans of Peter Fullo fell on him in the church of S. Barlaam, killed him, and threw his body into the Orontes River (481). F. 25 Apr.—H. L.—P. B.

Stephen II, the Younger, elected patriarch of Antioch after the murder of S. Stephen I. He was killed by the Monophysites, 25 Apr., 482. F. 25 Apr., Rom. Mart.—Comm.

* Stephen of Perm, Bp., C.; b. at Ustjug. He took the habit of S. Basil at Rostow, Russia, and, after 1370, evangelized the Sirjanes (Perm), translated the Gospels into their language, and, in 1379, was appointed bishop of Perm, residing at Ust-Wym. He erected schools and celebrated the liturgy in the Sirjane language. D. at Moscow, in 1396. F. 26 Apr. in all Russia.—Mz. Mrt.

Stephen, M., at Tarsus; v. S. Castor, 27 Apr.

* Stephen of Petschera, Bp., C. He was a disciple of S. Theodosius of Kiev, became abbot of the great monastery, and built the Blachernae (Klof) monastery at Kiev. In 1091, he was elected bishop of Wladimir in Volhynia. D. in 1094. F. 27 Apr. at Kiev and Wladimir.—Mz. Mrt.

* Stephen, "the Anchorite," a Coptic saint. F. 7 May, Cal. Opt.

Stephen, M., in Galatia; v. S. Meletius, 24 May.

Stephen, patriarch of Constantinople, 886-893. He was the son of Emperor Basil the Macedonian, and a brother of Emperor Leo VI. Consecrated, 25 Dec., 886, as first successor of the schismatic Photius, he was in union with Rome. F. 27 May, Rom. Mart., 17 May, Mz.

Stephen, apostle and first Bishop of Helsingland in Sweden. He was a monk of Corvey, was ordained reginary bishop with Adelward by Adalbert of Bremen, and sent to Sweden. Joyfully received by King Stenkil and his people, they introduced the Christian faith in Sigtun, Upsala, and Stockholm. Then Stephen went northward to the Skritefinns and won many for Christ in Helsingland. When attempting to destroy a shrine of Odin at Upsala, both bishops were attacked by pagans and whipped; Stephen was killed during a pagan reaction at Novala in Helsingland, 2 June, 1072. His tomb was venerated and his feast celebrated at Novala (Nora) 2 June, up to 1532.—H. L.—P. B.—L. S.

Stephen, a monk, who died in peace. F. 7 June, MGr.

Stephen, a monk; v. S. Anthimus., 7 June.

* Stephen Oberski (Komelski), abbot. B. at Wologda, he became a monk in Glushitzki monastery, and founded the monastery of S. Nicholas on Komel lake, in 1534. D. in 1542. F. 12 June, Mrt. Mz.

Stephen, M., alleged first Bp. of Reggio in Calabria. He is said to have come from Syria with S. Paul; the Apostle left him at Reggio and appointed him first Bishop of that city. He suffered martyrdom under Nero. S. Paul, however, probably did not disembark at Reggio. Metaphrastes first relates the story of this saint; from the Greek Menaea it became known at Reggio in the 17th century. In 1622, his veneration was approved for Reggio, but before the 17th century his existence was absolutely unknown there. F. 5 July, MGr., at Reggio (princ. patron) dp. 1 cl. oct.—H. L.—L. S.

Stephen, Leontius, Mauricius, Domnus, Melito, Achilleus, Daniel, Diomedes, and 36 companions, Mm., at Rome. The uncertain names of the companions, v. Chev., I, 1387. F. 11 July, Hier. Mart.

Stephen, "the Sabbaites," also called Wonder Worker, C.; he was a nephew of S. John Damascene and was received into the laura of S. Sabas when ten years of age. For a time he retired into the desert. He was the spiritual guide of many of his contemporaries. D. in 794. He is not identical with Stephen the Sabbaites, of 28 Oct. F. 13 July, full office in the Greek Church.—MGr.

* Stephen Machristshki, abbot; b. at Kiev, Russia, where he took the habit. He founded Machristshe monastery in the government of Moscow; also, with S. Gregory, Awnesh monastery. D. at Machristshe, in 1406. F. 14 July, Mz. Mrt.

* Stephen V, king of Serbia, 1389-1427, when that country was under Turkish supremacy. He was the son of S. Lazar Greblanowitch and a benefactor of his downtrodden nation. F. 19 July, Mz. Mrt.

Stephen I, M., Pope, 12 May 254 to 2 Aug. 257. He was a Roman of the gens Julia, elected two months after the death of S. Lucius. Against the violent decrees and letters of the bishops of Africa (S. Cyprian of Carthage) and of the Orient (Firmilian of the Cappadocian Caesarea) he stoutly maintained the validity of baptism when conferred by heretics ("nihil innovetur"). That he suffered martyrdom under Valerian is doubtful. A legend claims that he was beheaded while seated in his chair before an altar in the Catacombs. He was buried in the cemetery of S. Callisto, 17 Aug., 761; his relics were brought to San Silvestro. In 1160, they were stolen and transferred to Trani in Apulia, where he is patron against fever. In 1682, they were brought to Pisa (the head is in the cathedral of Pisa since 1047). F. (ancient) 2 Aug., Rom. Mart., simpl. in the Latin Church; dp. at Rome and in all Tuscany (before 1914). S. Stephen is princ. patron of Modigliana in Tuscany and of Lesina in Dalmatia. He is also patron of the Knights of S. Stephen, founded at Florence by Cosmo III, in 1561. ser Armenia; he suffered martyrdom at Kanshi, under Julian the Apostate, with 31 companions. His relics are at Ulua (Zeitun). F. 28 Aug., Arm. Menology.—Nill, II, 596.

Stephen (Istvan) I, the first Christian king and apostle of Hungary. B. at Gran (his pagan name was Vajk), son of the shrewd Geza, prince of the Magyars (who had come to Pannonia, about 895). He was baptized by S. Adalbert of Prague, 26 Dec., 986. He married Gisela, a sister of Emperor Henry II of Germany, whereby Christianity and the German influence were eminently strengthened in Hungary. After Geza's death (997) Stephen reigned as duke, perfected the foundation of the monastery of Martinsberg, and gave to his country an ecclesiastical organization by founding 10 (?) bishoprics. In 1000, he obtained the crown for himself from Pope Silvester II. He was crowned "Apostolic King" of Hungary at Gran, 15 Aug., 1000, on which day he consecrated his kingdom to the Blessed Virgin (the "Great Mother of the Hungarians"). He gave to his kingdom a wise Christian constitution, suppressed the pagan reaction under Kupa of Somagy with a strong hand, and, after the rebellion of Gyula, united Transylvania with Hungary. D. at Stuhlweissenburg, 15 Aug., 1038, and was buried by the side of his son, S. Emeric (Imre). He was canonized in 1083. His incorrupt right hand is the national palladium of Hungary. F. in the entire Latin Church, 2 Sept. sem. (by Urban VIII in 1631, 20 Aug. simpl.; transferred to 2 Sept. on 28 Nov., 1686, the anniversary of the victorious battle of Buda, 2 Sept. 1686). Stephen de Chatillon, C., Bp. of Die, O. Carth.: b. about 1155, at Lyons, of the family de Chatillon-les-Dombes. He led an austere life in the charterhouse of Portes, had visions and wrought many miracles. In 1196, he was elected prior; in 1203 bishop of Die. D. at Die, 7 Sept., 1208. Cult approved 1 Dec., 1907. F. 7 Sept. by the Carthusians and at Valence.—P. B.

Stephen and Socrates, alleged British martyrs under Diocletian, in Monmouth, where churches were dedicated to them. F. 17 Sept., Rom. Mart. No particulars are known of their life and passion. These saints, however, do not belong to Britain. Socrates is a martyr of Abretania, a province of Mysia (Asia), the capital of which was Ancyra Sidera; the copyists of the Hier. Mart. changed Abretania into Britannia. The name "Stephen" is a double of some other Stephen.—B. G., IV, 201.

Stephen I (Simon), "the First-crowned," king of Servia, son of S. Simeon Nemanja. He became megajupan (grand duke) of Servia, when his father entered Chilandari monastery, on Mt. Athos. Driven from Servia by his brother Vulcan, he was restored to the throne by another brother, S. Saba. The crown was sent to Stephen, in 1222, by Pope Honorius III. D. in 1228. His relics are at Studenitza monastery. F. 24 Sept., full office in all Servia.—Mrt. Mz.

* Stephen, Son of Enkua Marjam, an Ethiopian saint. F. 25 Sept. in the Church of Abyssinia.—Cal. Copt.

* Stephen Stiljanowitsh, C.; b. at Shupa, near Cholm, Russia. He was Wojewode to a Servian king, who gave him a piece of territory near Srem (Sirmium, Mitrowitz) in Servia. D. in 1515. His relics are in Ishitowatzk monastery. F. 4 Oct., Mrt. Mz.

Stephen, M., brother (not son) of S. Basilides, "the Father of Kings." F. 6 Oct. in the Coptic Church.—Cal. Copt.

Stephen Brankowitsh, "the Blind," nominal king of Servia. Although blinded by Sultan Amurat (1438), he succeeded his brother, Lazar II, in 1458. Vanquished by the Turks, he fled with his wife, S. Angelina, first to Albania, then to Srem (the ancient Sirmium). There both led a life of piety at Kupinic, on the River Save. He d. in 1477. His relics are at Krusedol. F. 11 Oct., in Servia, Mrt. Mz. His sons, George and John, are also venerated as saints by the Servians. All four were faithful Catholics; still they are venerated only by the schismatic Servians.

Stephen, "the Sabbaites," called also "Wonder Worker," C. He was a monk of the laura of S. Sabas near Jerusalem and composed many liturgical hymns (canons). D. in 794. F. 28 Oct., full office in the Greek Church.—MGR.

Stephen, C., Bp. of Cajazzo, in Italy. B. at Macerata, in 935; he was educated at Capua, became abbot of S. Salvatore Maggiore, and, 1 Nov., 979, bishop of Cajazzo. He assisted at a synod at Capua against simony. D. 29 Oct., 1023. F. dp. at Capua; in the diocese of Cajazzo (princ. patron) 29 Oct. dp. 1 cl. oct.; Finding of relics, 23 May, dp. maj. * Stephen II, Urosh-Milutin (Milutin Kralji) king of Servia, 1275-1320. He founded many churches, monasteries, and hospices, also 14 (?) bishoprics throughout Servia, and was victorious in many battles against Greeks, Bulgarians, and Dalmatians. His moral character, however, was not above reproach. During his reign the separation of the Servian Church from Rome was completed. D. 29 Oct., 1321, and was buried in S. Stephen's church, Bansk. His relics are now at Sofia in Bulgaria. F. 30 Oct., in Servia.—Mrt. Mz.

Stephen, Barnabas, Trophimus, Dorymedon, Cosmas, Damianus, Sabas, Bassus, Abraham, and others; martyrs of uncertain provenience. 31 Oct., Mz.

Stephen, C., Bp. of Apt in France. B. at Agde, in 975; elected bishop of Apt, 1 Oct., 1010. After two pilgrimages to Jerusalem he rebuilt his cathedral. D. 6 Nov., 1046. F. 6 Nov. dp. in the dioceses of Apt, Avignon, and Montpellier.—P. B.

* Stephen III, Detshani (Desanitz), king of Servia, 1322-1333. He was a bastard, son of King Stephen Milutin. He was blinded for supposed high treason and banished to Pantocrator monastery in Constantinople, 1317-1321, but was cured of blindness by a miracle of S. Nicholas. After his father's death he became king of Servia. His kingdom included Servia, Bulgaria, Albania, Bosnia, Herzegovina, Rumania, and Moldavia. The constant aim of Stephen was to establish a Greater Servia, which should unite all the peoples of the Balkan Peninsula, to conquer Constantinople and to win for himself the crown of a new Oriental Empire with its centre at Constantinople. In 1346, he was crowned at Skopje as "Tsar of the Serbs and Greeks." At the same time, at a Servian synod, he had the Servian archbishop of Ipek created an independent metropolitan, notwithstanding the anathema of the Church of Constantinople. He was even willing, in 1323, to unite with Rome and abandon the schism in order to secure the aid of Western Europe. But the Union (under John XXII) was of short duration. He was imprisoned and strangled by friends of his son, Stephen Dushan, 11 Nov., 1333. He died a schismatic. His relics are in Detshani monastery, which he had founded. F. 11 Nov., in Servia.—Mrt. Mz.—C. E., XIII, 733.

Stephen, M., at Asta; v. S. Honorius, 21 Nov.

Stephen and Mark, and another Mark, companions of Ss. Alexander and Alphaeus (28 Sept.), at Antioch in Pisidia. They were beheaded. F. 22 Nov., MGR.

Stephen, M., at Constantinople; v. S. Basil, 28 Nov.

Stephen, "the New M.;" b. of noble family at Constantinople (or at Messina, Sicily?), he took the Basilian habit in the monastery of S. Auxentius in 730. He knew Holy Scripture by heart. In 744, he was elected abbot to succeed S. John. At the outbreak of the Iconoclast quarrel he resigned and shut himself up in a narrow cell (756). When he refused to acknowledge the spurious synod of Constantinople (754), Emperor Constantine Copronymus destroyed his monastery and exiled him to the isle of Proconesus. Later on he was brought to Constantinople and, with 342 companions, kept in prison for nine months; then he was cruelly scourged. At last a mob entered the jail and dragged S. Stephen by his feet through the streets; some one dashed out his brains with a club, 28 Nov., 767. His body was torn to pieces by the enraged mob. With him were killed: Basil, Peter, Andrew, and 339 monks. F. 28 Nov., Rom. Mart. at Constantinople; in the Greek Church, full office; in the diocese of Messina, 29 Oct. dp.—H. L.—P. B.

* Stephen Urosh (Uros-Czar), C., the last scion of the Serbian royal family of Nemanja. B. in 1338, a son of Stephen Dushan; he became king of Serbia, in 1356, at the age of 18 years, but was dethroned by Vulkashin, an ambitious noble, in 1367. Vulkashin fell in the battle on the Maritza, 26 Sept., 1371. Stephen died two months later in prison. His relics are at Srem, in the Isaac monastery. Some say that he was killed by Vulkashin, in 1367. F. 2 Dec., in Serbia.—Mrt. Mz.

Stephen, M., in Africa; v. S. Claudius, 3 Dec.

Stephen, the "New Light," (Neolampos); son of the priest Zacharias at Constantinople and member of the clergy of the Hagia Sophia. After his father's death he retired into a cell near the church of S. Antipas, where he practiced the most austere asceticism, renewing the severity of the Fathers of the desert. D. in the 9th century. F. 9 Dec.—MGr.

Stephen, archbishop of Surosh or Sugdaea in the Crimea. B. in Cappadocia; he was consecrated bishop of Surosh (now Sudak) under Leo the Isaurian; he was exiled for the cult of images, but recalled under Constantine Copronymus. D. about 760. F. 15 Dec. full office in the Russian Church.—Mz.

Stephen, Deacon, "the First Martyr." He was of Jewish descent, but probably a Hellenist, i. e., born outside of Palestine. His mother-tongue was Greek. When complaints of the Christian Hellenists against the Hebrews (born in Palestine) made the election of deacons necessary, Stephen, a man full of the Holy Ghost, wisdom, grace and fortitude, was elected in the first place. His eloquence and his victorious disputes with the Jewish Hellenists brought upon him hatred and calumny. His fiery words before the Synedrium excited the fury of his hearers. Without trial and judgment they dragged him through the streets of the city and stoned him outside the gate (east or north of Jerusalem), whilst he was praying for his enemies. This happened within the first year after Our Savior's death. The remains of St. Stephen were buried by Gamaliel. His feast on 26 Dec. was celebrated at Jerusalem in the third or fourth century. His relics, in 415, were found at Kaphargamala and brought to the Church of Sion, on his feastday, 26 Dec. Parts of them were transferred to Constantinople; from there, under Pelagius I, in 557, to Rome; Pelagius II (d. 590) deposited them solemnly in the church of S. Lawrence. The F. of 2 Aug. is the F. of the Church of Antioch (tr. of some relics). F. in the Latin Church (5th century), 26 Dec. dp. 2 cl.; in the Greek Church now 27 Dec., full office; in the Syrian Church, 8 Jan.; in the Nestorian Church, 4th Friday after Epiphany. Tr. rel. in the Greek and Syrian Churches, 2 Aug., full office. The Roman feast on 3 Aug. may either be the Greek feast of 2 Aug., or it may be the feast of S. Stephen, first celebrated at Ancona (where one of the stones was venerated), or the feast of the Dedication of the church of S. Stephen at Rome, built under Leo I (now "degl' Abissini"). 7 May, Tr. rel. from Constantinople to Rome; Rom. Mart. Sturmio, abbot of Fulda, C.; b. of Christian parents in Bavaria. He attached himself to S. Boniface, whose favorite disciple he became. S. Wigbert educated him at Fritzlar. After his ordination he evangelized the Hessians; then he retired to the solitude of Hertzfeld for a while. 12 March, 744, he founded Fulda monastery, which he governed as abbot. Fulda was a nursery of the true monastic spirit, missionary activity, art and culture. From 747 to 748 he travelled in Italy, to study the Benedictine observances at Rome and Mte. Cassino. His monastery was involved in a struggle with Archbishop Lul of Mayence for the liberty and independence of Fulda. Whilst the quarrel lasted, Sturmio was exiled by King Pepin to Un-nedica (Jumièges?), 763 to 766. In 779, he accompanied Charlemagne on his campaign against the Saxons, from which he returned a sick man. D. 17 Dec., 779. He was can-onized by the 2nd Council of the Lateran (1139). His relics are in the Fulda cathedral. F. dp. 2 cl. (minor patron), at Fulda, 17 Dec. (Rom. Mart.); dp. at Paderborn.—Stamm., 413—Ord., 229—Buch.—Kr., 88.—H. D.

Suchiasite Martyrs in Armenia. According to an Armenian legend, S. Suchias (Sukias, Socias) was a relative of the king of the Alans and of Sathinica, the wife of King Artaxerxes of Armenia. He retired with 17 companions to Mt. Sugar, in the province of Ararat, to lead an ascetical life. Their names were: Lucanus, Polyeuctus, Codratus, Ischyron, Mymnos, Phocas, Nerganus, Domentius, Adrianus, Zosimas, Victarius, Talalus, Jordanus, Anastasius, Jacob, and Theodore. They dressed in deer skins and ate herbs. Some pagan marauders killed them, in the 2nd century. F. 27 Aug., Menol. Armen.; in the church of Georgia, 15 April; their solemn office is chanted by the Armenians on Tuesday after Septuagesima.—Nill., II, 573.—Tam., 149. (v. S. Sukias).

Suibert (Swibert), "the Elder," regional Bp., O. S. B.; b. in Northumbria, England, in 647. He was a disciple of S. Egbert, one of the twelve missionaries who, in 690, with S. Willibrord came to Frisia, where S. was elected regional bishop. He was consecrated in England by S. Wilfrid of York. After his return he crossed the Rhine and opened a mission among the Boructeri, on the Lippe and Ruhr rivers, probably because Pepin was dissatisfied with his election to the episcopal dignity. After his mission had been destroyed by the Saxons, he returned to Frankish territory, where S. Plectrude obtained for him, from Pepin, Kaiserswerth island, in the Rhine. Here, in 710, he built a monastery and died, 1 March, 713. His relics were found in Kaiserswerth, in 1626. F. 1 March dp. in the dioceses of Cologne, Paderborn, Münster, and in Holland and Belgium.—Bat., 109.—H. L.—H. D.—Kr. 4.

Suibert (Swibert), "the Younger," first bishop of Verden, 786-807. He is not identical with S. Suibert the Elder. F. 30 Apr. in some martyrologies. The church of Verden, however, end of the Middle Ages, confounded him with the elder Suibert and celebrated his F. 1 March, and the Coming of his relics 9 May. His bones with those of his seven successors were found in 1630, when the Cathedral of Verden was given back to Catholic worship.—H. L.—H. D.

Ghislain, Belgium, secretly stole the relics and brought them to his abbey. S. seems to be identical with S. Sulpice of Baye, 27 Jan. F. 21 July at Saint-Ghislain; dp. at Bayeux, 4 Sept.—P. B.—Mg.

Sunaman, M., at Wexioe; v. Winaman, 15 Feb.

Suniman, abbot, and companions, Mm., killed in August, 870, by pagan Danes at Bennet Hulme monastery in Norfolk. F. 15 Feb.—St.

Sunniva, V., and companions; Mm. According to a spurious legend she was the daughter of an Irish king. With her brother Alban and a multitude of virgins and others, she fled from foreign invaders to Selje island in Norway. There they were attacked by natives from the mainland and slain (or, when they tried to escape to the cave, the rock closed upon them and they came forth no more). Their story is the Scandinavian version of the legend of S. Ursula. The bones discovered in the 10th century were probably those of some shipwrecked foreign rovers, massacred in Earl Hakon's reign. When these relics were brought to Bergen, in 1170, S. Sunniva was elected patroness of Bergen. F. 8 July, in pre-Reformation times, in the dioceses of Abo, Skara, and (holyday) Trondhjem; at Trondhjem, 31 Aug., Tr. rel. —O'H., VII, 166.

Swithin (Swithun), C., Bp. of Winchester, one of the most popular Anglo-Saxon Saints. He was probably a native of Wessex; was educated in Winchester monastery and ordained by Bishop Helmestan, about 830. He was in great favor with King Egbert, and educated his son, Ethelwolf, who, when he became king after his father's death, nominated him bishop of Winchester (852) and asked his advice in all ecclesiastical affairs. S. Swithin held an important synod in 855; he remained faithful to the king after the revolt of 856. Amidst the general gloom of the Danish invasions, he stands conspicuous for proficiency in science and literature. He lived to see his episcopal city plundered and in great part ruined by the Danes, in 860. D. 2 July, 863. According to his own directions, he was buried in the churchyard. His bones were found by Bishop Ethelwold and solemnly brought into the cathedral, 15 July, 971. In 1093, they were transferred to the present majestic building. He is called "the Weeping S. Swithin," because rainy constellations often arise about his feast. ("If it rains on S. Swithin's day, it will continue to rain for six weeks.") The translation of his relics (971), a legend relates, was retarded 40 days by heavy rains. F. 2 July, Rom. Symmachus (Quintus Aurelius Memmius Symmachus), M., a highly educated Roman patrician. He was consul in 485. His great-grand-father was the celebrated orator Symmachus, his son-in-law, the famous Boethius. In the Laurentian schism he was a faithful partisan of Pope Symmachus. He wrote seven books of Roman history. For alleged high treason he was executed soon after Boethius, in 525, at Ravenna. Like Boethius, he is reputed a saint by some hagiographers. F. 27 May.—C. E.

Symmachus, C., Pope, 22 Nov. 498 to 514. He was a native of Sardinia, a convert from paganism. Elected by the rigidly orthodox majority of the clergy, the Byzantine minority (who favored lenient measures to end the Acacian schism), elected the Archpriest Lawrence. Both were consecrated the same day. The schism was settled for a time by King Theodoric in favor of Symmachus, but renewed, in 501, by the Laurentians, who took possession of most of the Roman churches, the Arian Theodoric refusing to interfere. In 501, both factions were induced by the king to attend a synod at Rome, but when Symmachus at the first session started to defend himself, the mob fell upon him and ill-treated him and his priests. When, in consequence, Symmachus refused to attend any more sessions, the fathers of the synod (Palmaria) declared that they could not pronounce judgement upon the Pope; they decreed that the churches must be given back to Symmachus and recalcitrant priests treated as schismatics. Theodoric, however, favored Lawrence, and hence Symmachus remained restricted to S. Peter's, until (506) the Laurentian party was dissolved. Symmachus was a father to the poor, especially to those persecuted by the Arian rulers. His pontificate was one chain of bitter persecution and calumny (also charges of adultery). His name is not found in any martyrology prior to the 16th century. F. 19 July, Rom. Mart., dp. at Rome and in Sardinia. D. 19 July, 514.—C. E.—Buch.—W.W.—H. L.

Symmachus, C., Bp. of Capua. He was a native of Rome and successor to S. Rufinus at the time of Pope Celestinus I. After the Council of Ephesus he built a church to the Bl. Virgin Mary at Capua Vetere. D. about 440. F. 22 Oct. dp. 2 cl. at Capua; at Capua Vetere (princ. patron), dp. 1 cl. oct.—H. L.

Symmetrius, M., a priest, who was martyred with 22 companions and buried in S. Priscilla, at Rome, in 159. F. 26 May. (v. S. Simitrius).

Symphorianus, Macarius, Victorinus, Mauricius, Anicetus, Modestus, Cyriacus, Faustus, Placidus, Rochus, Alexander, Genesius, Eulalia, and Irene, Mm., whose remains were taken from the catacomb of S. Callistus and transferred to the Jesuit church at Antwerp, 27 Feb., 1650. Nothing is known of their "acts." Whether they were martyrs, is a question open to discussion. F. 27 Feb., in the Jesuit church in Antwerp.—H. L.

Symphorianus, M. His relics are in the convent of the Poor Clares of S. Lucia at Foligno. F. 7 July; at S. Lucia, 31 Oct. dp.—H. L.

Symphorianus, M. He was born of a senatorial family at Autun in Gaul, and baptized by S. Benignus; because he refused to sacrifice to Cybele, he was arrested, scourged, incarcerated, and, after three days, beheaded, 22 Aug., about 180. S. Simplicius built a church over his tomb, S. Euphronius a monastery; his relics are now in the cathedral. He is one of the most celebrated martyrs of France, for the miracles wrought at his tomb. F. 22 Aug., Rom. Symphorianus, alleged M. in Africa; v. S. Felix, 3 Feb.

Symphorosa, M., wife of S. Getulius, M., at Tivoli, near Rome. According to her "acts," she was martyred with her seven sons (Crescens, Julianus, Nemesius, Primitivus, Justinus, Stacteus, and Eugenius) at Tivoli, during the last years of Hadrian. They were buried at the 9th milestone of the Via Tiburtina. A basilica was built over their tomb. Their "acts" are unreliable and interpolated, an adaptation of the story of the Maccabean mother and her seven sons, or of the legend of the Seven Sleepers of Ephesus. The seven martyrs were neither brothers nor sons of Symphorosa. Their names are found, 27 June, in the Hier. Mart., appropriated by Cordova in Spain. (The Spaniards have annexed quite a number of derelict martyrs from the old lists). The sons of Symphorosa in the Hier. Mart. are eight: Petrus, Marcellianus, Januarius, Dionysius, Sempronius, Clemens, Germanus, and Irenaeus (Achelis, 161). The names in the acts being different from the names in the Hier. Mart., the story appears to be a Christian romance. The relics of these saints were transferred to S. Angelo in Pescheria, Rome, when Aistulf, in 752, attacked the city. F. 18 July, Rom. Mart., simpl. in the Latin Church: dp. 2 cl. at Tivoli (minor patrons): dp. maj. at Rome in S. Angelo in Foro Pescario.—Ruin.—70.—Achel., 159.—C. E.

Tarachus, Probus, and Andronicus, Mm. Tarachus was a native of Claudiopolis in Isauria (a Roman city), and a former army officer. When 65 years old, he was arrested, under Diocletian, with Probus, a citizen of Side in Pamphylia and the youthful Andronicus, a scion of a noble Ephesian family. They were tried and tortured, first at Tarasus, then at Anazarbus in Cilicia. At last they were killed by the sword, in the amphitheater of Anazarbus, probably in 304. They are the most celebrated martyrs in Cilicia. Their "acts," which were formerly considered authentic, are numbered among the hagiographic romances by modern critics. F. 11 Oct.—Rom. Mart. Tarasla = S. Teresa, Tarasius, Patriarch of Constantinople. He was an imperial secretary and a layman when elected patriarch. Before his consecration (25 Dec., 784) he demanded reunion of the Byzantine Church with other Churches, especially the Roman, and restoration of the cult of images. Assisted by the Empress Irene, he carried out this programme at the Second Council of Nice. He was unjustly accused by the monks, also by S. Theodore the Studite, of favoring simony. He admitted simonists to penance and reconciliation, but did not reinstate them. D. 25 Feb., 806. F. 25 Feb., Rom. Tarsicius, M., at Rome; v. S. Theodore, 6 Feb.

Tarsicius, a Roman, the "martyr of the Holy Eucharist." The only positive information concerning him is found in the poetical epigram composed in his honor by Pope Damasus. While carrying the B. Sacrament in his clothes, probably to bring it to Christian prisoners, he was held up by soldiers, and, when he refused to give up the sacred mysteries, was killed by the populace with clubs. The story is genuine. He may have been a deacon (or an acolyte?). He was buried in the cemetery of S. Callistus; now his relics are in S. Silvestro. Dard., II, 119.—Lins., 150.—H. L.—F. 15 Aug., Rom. Teresa (Teresia), V., Reformer of the Carmelite Order and ascetical writer. Born at Avila in Old Castile, March 28, 1515, of very pious parents, Alonzo Sanchez de Cepeda and Beatriz Davila Ahumada. When seven years old, she ran away from home with her little brother, to go to Morocco to be martyred for the faith by the Moors. When she was twelve years of age, her mother died. Then her father, seeing that her morals were imperiled by unsuitable company and by the reading of chivalresque romances, placed her with the Augustinian nuns. Compelled by a severe sickness to return home, she resolved to join a religious community. Her father refusing his permission, she left home secretly and entered the Carmelite convent at Avila, where, however, the discipline was somewhat relaxed. She took the vows on Nov. 3, 1534. She was cured of a nervous sickness by the help of St. Joseph, wherefore she engaged herself to spread his (then somewhat rudimentary) cult. Her convalescence was followed by severe spiritual conflicts and worldly distractions, her convent having no enclosure. Roused by the "Confessions" of St. Augustine, she gave herself systematically and without reserve to the service of God. By her four degrees of prayer: recollection, quietude, union, and ecstasy, she obtained extraordinary graces. She was favored with visions, apparitions of Christ, and an angel perforated her heart with a golden arrow. Misunderstood, also by her confessors, and declared a victim of diabolical deceptions, she suffered much, until S. Peter of Alcantara became her spiritual guide (1559). Now she was called by the Lord to reform the Carmelite Order. Having overcome much opposition, she succeeded in founding the first convent of the Discalced Carmelite Nuns of the Primitive Observance, in honor of St. Joseph, August 24, 1562. Up to 1576 she established nine convents, under the greatest difficulties. In 1576, she was prohibited from founding new establishments, through the resentment of Jerome Gratian, the Apostolic Visitor of the Carmelite friars and nuns in Andalusia. For four years he kept matters in turmoil, and St. Teresa's work seemed to be lost, when Philip II interfered in her favor. On June 22, 1580, her Discalced Carmelite nuns were declared a separate province by Gregory XIII. At her death her Reform Congregation comprised 32 monasteries. She died, Oct. 4, 1582, at Alba de Tormes. The works she has left us on Mystical Theology continue to be text books on the subject. There is a movement on foot to have her declared a Doctor of the Church. Many lives of this eminent saint have been published; but the best is her Autobiography, written with charming candor, and, from the literary point of view, a Spanish classic. Her relics are at Alba. She was beatified in 1614 and canonized on March 12, 1622. F. (in consequence of the reform of the Julian Calendar) 15 Oct., Rom. Mart. In the Latin Church, dp. since 1636. To the Carmelites the feast had been granted in 1616 for Oct. 5. In 1627, St. Teresa was declared patroness of Castile and Leon, but the decree was revoked upon the protest of the Canons of Compostella, in 1629. F. O. Teresa of the Child of Jesus, (B.), V., O. Carm., called "the Little Flower of Jesus." Mary Frances Teresa Martin was born at Alençon, France, Jan. 2, 1873, but was raised at Lisieux, with her sisters, three of whom became nuns. After her ninth year she endeavored to obtain permission to receive the Carmelite habit, first from the Bishop of Bayeux, then from Pope Leo XIII. whom she visited. At last her perseverance was crowned: she entered the Carmel at Lisieux, on April 9, 1888. No extraordinary event marked her religious life; she was remarkable only for her perfect simplicity, humility, charity, her love of and her trust in God. She offered herself as a victim to "the merciful Love of the Good God" and, consumed by the flames of this heavenly love, died at Lisieux, Sept. 30, 1897, aged twenty-four. The story of her life, written by her in obedience to her prioress, is now known all over the world. Countless are the miracles wrought through her intercession. She writes herself: "I count fully on not remaining idle in Heaven. My longing is to labor even there for the Church and souls. Our Lord will work wonders for me that will infinitely surpass my boundless desire. After my death I shall let fall a shower of roses." (Acta Ap. Sedis, May, 1923). She was beatified April 29, 1923. F. 30 Sept., O. Carm.

Teresa (Tarasia), (B.), matron, a daughter of King Sancho I, of Portugal, elder sister of Ss. Sancia and Mafalda. B. about 1178; she became the wife of King Alfons IX of Leon, from whom she was separated because of consanguinity, in 1196. In 1200, she introduced Cistercian nuns at Lorvaño monastery (O. S. B.) and took the veil there herself, in 1225. D. 17 June, 1250. Beatified, 23 Dec., 1705. F. in Portugal, 17 June dp.—H. L.

Teresa Fantou (B.), V., M.; a Sister of Charity at Arras; she was arrested with three other sisters in 1794 and brought to Cambrai, where they were guillotined, 26 June, 1794. Beatified, 13 June, 1920.—Acta Ap. Sedis.

Teresa of S. Augustine (Lidoine) (B.), and companions, Vv., Mm., O. Carm. T. was b. at Paris in 1752. She took the Carmelite habit at Compiègne and was elected superioress. In 1790, she was driven from her monastery and lived in private houses with her 15 sisters. In 1794, they were arrested, conducted to Paris, kept in a horrible prison, and executed, 17 July, 1794. Beatified, 13 May, 1906. F. 24 July, dp. maj. O. Carm.; 17 July in the dioceses of Paris, Beauvais, Cahors, Evreux, Le Mans, etc.—H. L.—Red., 289.

Thaddeus, M., in Asia; v. S. Demetrius, 11 May.

Thaddeus, M., who preached the Gospel in Mesopotamia and converted King Abgar of Edessa. The Syrians claim that he brought the miraculous picture of Christ to Edessa and died there in peace. (v. S. Abgar). The Armenian legend adds that from Edessa Thaddeus went to Armenia, at the time of King Sanatruk, and converted Sanducht, the daughter of Sanatruk. The king executed both at Jarta (Schawarshan), about 47. The Greeks, Syrians, and Armenians say that Thaddeus was one of the 72 disciples of Christ. But Sanatruk reigned from 166 to 200 and cannot be connected with the story of S. Thaddous (Weber, Kirche Armeniens. 65 ss.). F. in the Syrian Church, 20 Aug. 1 cl.; in the Greek Church, 21 Aug., full office; in the Armenian Church, 23 Dec. Finding of relics 30 May (solemn office: Saturday within the Octave of the Transfiguration. cf. Nilles, I, 269 and II, 589). In the Coptic Church 26 June and (Tr. rel. to Constantinople), 23 July. His name is in the diptychs of the Armenian Mass.—Web., 72. Scherm., 282.—Fort., 397.—Nill., II, 589.

Thaddeus, a Greek M., who was broken upon the wheel. F. 22 Nov., MGr.

Thaddeus McCarthy (Machar) (B.), Bp. of Cloyne, 1490–92. Returning from a pilgrimage to Rome, he died at Ivrea (1497) where his body is venerated in the cathedral. Wonderful miracles attested his sanctity and led to his beatification. His cult was approved in 1910. (Off. pr.). F. 24 (26) Oct. dp. in the diocese of Ivrea.

Thaddeus Lieu (B.), M., a Chinese priest in the province of Zyu-Thuan; after languishing in prison for two years, he was strangled 30 Nov., 1823. Beatified, 27 May, 1900. F. 24 Nov.—Kempf, 283.

Thais (Thaisis), according to the legend a holy penitent of the fourth century; converted at Alexandria by S. Paphnutius (or by Serapion the Sindonite, or by Bessarion) and wallled up three years in a cell. (Par. 30). She often repeated the prayer: "Thou who didst create me, have mercy on me!" Towards the end of her life she was allowed by her spiritual advisers (Ss. Antony, Paul the Simple, and Paphnutius) to share the austere life of the other sisters. She died about 348. The Western Church became acquainted with her in the 6th century through the translator Dionysius (d. about 530). Some (e.g., Batiffol) think that the story of the conversion of Thais is a "morality" without foundation in fact. Her legend has been made known to the general public by a modern opera. F. 8 Oct., MGr. (not in the Rom. Mart.).—Par., 140.—Ord., 146.—H. L.—F. J.

Thallelaeus Ericlautos ("Weeping much"), hermit. B. in Cilicia; he was a hermit near Gabala (Hawat) in Syria, next to the shrine of an idol, where he converted many of the pagan pilgrims; many years he spent in a low barrel, practicing frightful austerities. F. 27 Feb., MGr.

Thallelaeus, M., at Lentini, Sicily, a companion of Ss. Stratonicus and Cleonicus; he died in peace, when about to present himself to the persecutor Tertullus. F. 10 May.—H. L.

Thallelaeus, "the Merciful," M., a son of Verucius, a Roman general; he practiced medicine at Anazarbus in Cilicia. On the promulgation of the decree of Emperor Numerian against Christianity, he took refuge in an olive plantation, but was caught and dragged to Aegae on the sea coast; there he was tortured, thrown into the sea, and, at last, beheaded, at Aegae (not at Edessa in Mesopotamia). His "acts" contain genuine facts, but also much fabulous matter. He has a church at Edessa, but his relics are at Constantinople in the Church of S. Agathonicus. Severus of Antioch preached a panegyric in his honor. He is one of the "unselfish" or "silverless" (anargyroi) Greek saints, who cured the sick gratis. The Russians invoke him at the blessing of water. F. 20 May, Rom. Mart., full office in the Greek Church. His companions, Alexander and Asterius, were either his executioners or bystanders.—Comm.

Thaumasius, M., at Cyzicus; v. S. Theognis, 28 Apr.

Thaw = S. Llythan.

Thea (not Ennatha) and Valentina, Vv., and Paul, MM. Thea was born at Gaza, Valentina at Caesarea in Palestine; both were tortured and beheaded under Emperor Maximus. Paul, who saw them suffer with so much patience and fortitude, believed and was also decapitated. F. 10 Feb., MGr. Mz.; v. S. Paul, 16 July.

Thea, M., a Greek, who was killed by the sword. F. 23 Feb., Mz.

Thea, V., of Ardrea, Londonderry; she was a daughter of Chairthind (Carthenn), a scion of Colla Uais, monarch of Ireland; the veil she received from S. Patrick. F. 3 Aug.—O'H., VIII, 31.

Theagenes (Theognis), M., a recruit at Cyzicus on the Propontis (Marmara), belonging to the second Trajan legion. He refused to serve the gods, was struck with clubs and then cast into the sea, under Licinius, about 320. His legend is similar to that of S. Theodore of Euchaita. The Greeks claim that he was bishop of Parium on the Hellespontus, but he was neither bishop nor the "son of a bishop." His alleged companions, "Primus" and "Cyrinus," never existed; their names are copyist's errors for "Cyzicus" and "Prima Hellesponti." The "acts" of Bishop Theagenes are spurious. F. 3 Jan., Rom. Mart.; 2 Jan., MG., Mz.—Lins., 237.—Achel., 116.—H. L.

Theban Legion, Mm. In 286, Maximianus Hercules crossed the Alps to suppress the revolt of the Bagauds in Gaul. Having made the Simplon Pass, at Octodurum (Martigny), he put his troops to a test to purify them of Christians. In his army was the Theban Legion, recruited in Upper Egypt, where Christianity had long been established. This Legion was probably at the time dispersed over the North; cohorts, manipuli, and alae were quartered on the Rhine, at Treves, and in Gaul. When Maximian gave the order for the solemn sacrifice, the Thebans, camped at Agaunum (near Octodurum), refused to join in the ceremony. Maximian ordered the Legion to be decimated. This was done twice. Still he could not break their inflexible valor, and in a frenzy ordered all to be surrounded and massacred. It is scarcely possible to believe that a whole legion (6,600 soldiers) was massacred at Agaunum. One cohort may have been there, not more; besides, some or many of them were pagans. On the other hand, the martyrdom of the Theban soldiers can hardly be called into question. Theodore of Octodurum (369-391) built a basilica to treasure their relics; S. Sigismund of Burgundy established or renewed a monastic community, where, in 522, the "Laus perennis" (perpetual psalmody) was introduced. The abbey, to-day, is called Saint-Maurice; v. S. Thecla, the "Apostolic," V., and proto-martyr amongst women. According to her apocryphal "acts" (probably composed about 180), Thecla was the daughter of pagan parents at Iconium (Asia Minor). She heard S. Paul preach as she sat at her chamber window, and after that refused to listen to the advances of her betrothed, Thamyras. She attached herself to the service of S. Paul and followed him to Seleucia. There she was arrested and exposed to wild beasts, which, however, would not touch her. She then jumped into a pond full of seals and porpoises, and baptized herself. After that she escaped and followed S. Paul everywhere, dressed in boy's clothes. When S. Paul left for Rome, she was led by a shining cloud to a cave, where she spent seventy years and died in peace. Her "acts," as we have them, are fabulous, but they certainly embody early and genuine reports, which date back to sub-Apostolic times. The "three torments" of St. Thecla to which the Church refers in her prayer for the dying, were: the eviction from the house of her pagan parents and the sentences to be thrown to the wild beasts and to be burnt at the stake. These sufferings are equivalent to martyrdom. Her greatest and oldest sanctuary was formerly at Meriamlik, near Seleucia. From there her cult spread over the entire Church; in Rome, however, her veneration never gained a firm foothold. Milan, Lyons, and Tarragona became centers of her cult in the West. Her Feast was anciently celebrated at Iconium, on Dec. 20; at Seleucia, 23 Sept.; at Nicomedia, 22 Feb. Now in the Latin Church 23 Sept. Rom. Mart.; d. 2 cl. at Smyrna, and (since the 13th century) simpl. in the Roman Breviary. Theodora, Empress of Constantinople; b. at Elissa in Paphlagonia. In 830, she married Emperor Theophilus. Although herself a strenuous defender of the cult of images, she had no influence on her Iconoclastic husband. After his death (20 Jan., 842), as regent for her son Michael, the Drunkard, she put an end to Iconoclasm, designated S. Methodius patriarch of Constantinople and, in 842, held the Council of Constantinople, which confirmed the decrees of the second of Nice. She introduced the "Feast of Orthodoxy" (1st Sunday in Lent), prepared the way for the conversion of the Bulgarians, and tried to lead the Paulicians back to the Church. In 856, she was deposed by her son and sent to a monastery, where she died, 11 Feb., 867. Her claims to sanctity are questionable. Her relics are in Corfu since 1460. Theodore, "the Philosopher," Archbp. of Canterbury, England, O. S. B. He was a native of Tarsus in Cilicia (b. about 602), spent some time at Athens and took the Benedictine habit at Rome. He was 66 years old, when consecrated (26 March, 668) by Pope Vitalian to succeed S. Deusdedit in the see of Canterbury. He started for England, accompanied by the African S. Adrian and the Anglo-Saxon S. Benedict Biscop, invested with authority recognized by all the Anglo-Saxons of the Heptarchy. He was enthroned, 27 May, 669. With great talent for organization and a strong hand, he undertook the task of abolishing old abuses and of reforming the discipline and liturgy. He held provincial synods in 673, 680, and 684, founded new dioceses and erected cathedral schools. The attempt to divide the great bishopric of Northumbria into four dioceses led to grievous ecclesiastical complications with S. Wilfrid, which lasted many years. After two appeals to Rome, which were disregarded by Archbishop Theodore and King Egfrid, the two saints were reconciled, in 687. The Penitential ascribed to S. Theodore, which was of great importance for the penitential discipline of the 8th to 12th centuries, is only partly Theodore's work. D. 19 Sept., 690. He was the last foreign missionary called to occupy the metropolitan dignity in England. His administration, lasting 22 years, marks the golden age of the English Church. He was buried in S. Augustine's abbey church. F. 19 Sept. Rom. Mart., now simpl. O. S. B. in England.—St.—L. S.—Angl.—Hamp.

Theodore Tiro, of Euchaita (near Amasea), in Pontus, M. He is one of the great military saints of the Eastern Church. No reliable accounts of him are extant. He was a native of Syria or Armenia, newly enlisted in the Roman army, and therefore was called "Tiro," the recruit (or perhaps he belonged to the Cohors Tyronum). With his legion he was sent into winter quarters in Pontus. At the outbreak of the persecution, in 303, he set fire to the temple of Kybele at Amasea, wherefore he was torn with whips, hoisted on the rack, and at last burnt alive, 17 Feb., 306. The centre of his cult was Euchaita, later called Theodoropolis, now Tchorum. In the 12th century his body was brought to Brindisi (Italy), his head to Gaëta. Euchaita during the early Middle Ages was one of the most famous shrines in Christendom. Later "acts" have embellished the Passion of Theodore fantastically (battle with a dragon, long speeches, etc.). In the 9th century, in cult and legend, another Theodore rose at Euchaita, a Roman commander-in-chief (Stratelates), called "of Heraclea." His "acts," however, are identical with those of the Recruit, only remodeled and developed. There is no doubt about the identity of the two and of the priority of the soldier. Feasts of the Recruit: 9 Nov., Rom. Mart. (anniversary of the ancient dedication of his church at Rome); simpl. in the Latin Church. At Brindisi (princ. patron) dp. 1 cl. oct.; 27 Apr. Tr. rel. dp. 1 cl. oct. He is also princ. patron of the diocese of Satriano. At Gaëta, 9 Nov. dp. 2 cl.; at Venice, dp. 2 cl. 10 Nov. According to a Coptic legend he was the son of S. John of Shutp (Setes), b. in Upper Egypt (near Osjut). John and his son had come from Shutp to Amasea. F. 16 Nov., full office. He is patron against storms; in Rome, patron of children. His name is in the Proskomide of the Greek and Russian Masses. Feasts of the legendary Theodore of Heraclea: 7 Feb., Rom. Mart.; in the Greek Church, 8 Feb., full office Tr. rel., 8 June, full office.—Leg. Stud., 31, 45, 58.—Milit., 10.—Luc., 229.—Passions, 200.—Ruin., 506.

Theodore of Studion (Studites), abbot, energetic defender of the cult of images, of ecclesiastical liberty and unity, reformer of monasticism (O. S. Bas), and liturgical poet of the Greek Church. B. at Constantinople, in 759, a brother of S. Joseph, M. archbishop of Thessalonica, a nephew and, since 794, successor of S. Plato as abbot of Saccudion (on the eastern shore of the Bosphorus). In 796, he was exiled by Emperor Constantine VI, because he openly opposed him in his divorce affair, but was recalled by the Empress Irene. In 799, he transferred his monks to Constantinople and took charge of the monastery of Studion. There, by his reform (community life, closure, poverty, discipline, studies, liturgy and manual work) he exercised a powerful influence on Byzantine monasticism. Again exiled, by Emperors Nicephorus and Leo V, he combated to his death Caesaropapism and Iconoclasm. D. at Chalcis, 11 Nov., 826. F. 12 Nov., Rom. * Theodosius of Uglitsh, Bp., C. He was educated at Kiev, Russia. In 1662, he was elected abbot of Cherson; in 1687, abbot of Eletz monastery; in 1692, archbishop of Tshernigow and metropolitan of Russia. He d. in 1696 and was canonized by the Holy Synod in 1896. F. 7 Jan., Mz.

Theodosius, Coenobiarch ("Preceptor of the Desert"), at Marissa in Cappadocia. After being ordained "lector," he visited S. Simeon Stylites in Syria and the holy places at Jerusalem. Then he spent some time in the cell of S. Longinus, at the tower of David and at the church of Our Lady on the way to Bethlehem (in which originated the feast of the Mother of God on the 15 August.) Then he lived for 30 years in the "Cave of the Magi," between Bethlehem and Jerusalem. At last he founded the great monastery in the desert of Judah (on the Dead Sea), the first monastery of Cenobites (brothers of the common life) according to the rule of S. Basil; the divine offices were held there in Greek, Armenian, and Arabic. Sallustius, patriarch of Jerusalem, appointed S. Theodosius head of all the monks living in community, and S. Sabas superior of all the hermits in Palestine. Being a strenuous defender of orthodoxy, he was banished by the Monophysite Emperor Anastasius, in 513, but recalled by Justinus, in 518. D. 105 years old, on 11 Jan., 529. F. 11 Jan., Rom. Mart., (at Jerusalem cp. 16 Jan.); full office in the Greek and Melchite Churches. Comm.—C. E.—W. W.—Buch.

* Theodosius Theophorus, Bp., C., a brother of Dionysius, the founder of the monastery of S. Dionysius on Mt. Athos. B. at Koriza in Macedonia; he took the habit at Constantinople, was elected abbot of Philotheu on Mt. Athos and Metropolitan of Trebizond, in the 14th century. F. 11 Jan. in Philotheu monastery.—H. L.

Theodosius Flavius I, "the Great," Greek Emperor, is venerated as a saint in the Armenian and Coptic Churches. B. at Coca in Spain, in 346; he was crowned Emperor of the East at Sirmium, 19 Jan., 379; of the West, 15 May, 392. D. at Milan, 17 Jan., 395. F. in Armenia, 17 Jan. His name is daily commemorated in the Armenian Mass; the Coptic Church venerates him 18 Jan. and 3 Nov., with the 150 Fathers of the Council of Constantinople.—Biogr.—Nill., II, 565.

Theodosius, alleged Bp. of Syracuse. F. 14 June.—H. L.

* Theodosius, Coptic patriarch of Alexandria, 538–567. He was a staunch Monophysite, the head of the Phthartolatri; his opponent was the Julianist Gajanus, whose party was very strong; the orthodox patriarch was Paul. Theodosius was exiled and fled to Mali, but was restored by the Empress Theodora. F. 2 July, Rb. Sl.; in the Coptic Church, 22 June, Cal. Copt.

Theodosius and John, brothers, Cc. Theodosius was a stylite on a pillar at Edessa, John an ascete at Babylon; both were disciples of S. Theodore, bishop of Edessa, 9th century. F. 9 July, Mz.

Theodosius, C., Bp. of Auxerre; he succeeded S. Ursus about 508 and was present at the synod of Orléans, in 511. D. 17 July, 516. F. 17 July, Rom. Mart.—P. B.

Theodosius, "the New" (II), Emperor. B. 30 Apr., 401; he received the title "Augustus," 11 Jan., 402, and was crowned Emperor of the East, 1 May, 408. D. at Constantinople, 28 July, 450. He was not a strong ruler, but was guided by his energetic sister, S. Pulcheria, and by his wife Eudoxia. He was personally pious and charitable, but favored the heretic Eutyches and hence the Monophysites venerate him as a saint. Rabban Slibha, 18 Jan. and 13 Oct.; the Armenians together with Theodosius I, 18 Jan. The Greeks commemorate him 29 or 30 July.—Nill., II, 567.—Orth., 104.

Theodota, M., at Cappadocian Caesarea; v. Theodotus, 3 July.

Theodota, M., at Constantinople, slain for the cult of images under Emperor Leo the Isaurian. She had hidden a picture representing Our Lord, another of His Blessed Mother, and a third of the martyr S. Anastasia, from the searchers employed by the Iconoclast Emperor. F. 17 July, Rom. Mart.—H. L.

Theodota, and her three children, Mm. She was a rich lady from Nice (not from Nicomedia). When she refused the hand of a noble officer, he sent her and her three sons to Nicetias, prefect of Bithynia, and charged them with being Christians. They were cast into a furnace and perished in the flames. Evodius, the eldest of her sons, was beheaded, under Diocletian, in 304. A church was dedicated to these martyrs at an early age at Constantinople and rebuilt by Justin in 520. The "acts" are spurious. F. 2 Aug., Rom. Mart.; 22 Dec. and 29 July, MG.—Achel., 167.—H. L.

Theodotus, M., at Cyzicus; v. S. Theognis, 28 Apr.

Theodotus, Bp. of Cyrenia, Cyprus; he is said to have suffered long incarceration under Licinius. After the death of this Emperor he was set free and restored to his see. D. about 325. F. 6 May, Rom. Mart.; 19 Jan. (release from prison), and 2 March (death), Mz., MGr.—Comm. Cypr.

Theodotus, M., of Ancyra, under Diocletian. According to the touching story of his "acts," he was a Christian innkeeper zealously given to works of faith and charity. Because he buried the bodies of the seven virgins, Teccusa and companions, he was arrested, tried, tortured, and beheaded. His "acts" had been considered genuine beyond a doubt, but the Bollandist Delehaye (Anal. Boll., 1903) shows that they are a moralizing novel, composed to illustrate a religious truth, and denies the very existence of Theodotus. F. 18 May, Rom. Mart. In the Greek Church, full office, 7 June; 7 Sept., Rb. Sl.; 2 March in the Coptic Church. He is patron of innkeepers.—Ruin, 373.—L. S.—H. L.—P. B.—A. B., 22, 320.—Dand., IV, 163.

Theodotus, C., Bp. of Ephesus. F. 12 Oct., Mz.

Theodotus, C., Bp. of Laodicea. He was the physician to whom Eusebius dedicated his great work on the Evangelical Demonstration. He was an Arian, but, in 325, subscribed to the Nicene Creed. Nevertheless he later cooperated with the semi-Arian Eusebius of Nicomedia and took an active part in the campaign against the orthodox patriarch, S. Eustathius of Antioch. D. in 335. It is to be regretted that Baronius did not cancel his name when he revised the Roman Martyrology. F. 2 Nov., Rom. Mart. He is not venerated in the Orient—H. L.—P. B.

Theodotus, M., at Heraclea; v. S. Clementinus, 14 Nov.

Theodulus, the Stylite, C. According to his legendary "Life," he had been prefect of Constantinople under Theodosius I. After the death of his wife, he left his home and spent the rest of his life on a pillar near Edessa. The legend relates that, after having spent 40 years on his column, he went to Damascus, where, by divine revelation, he found a clown who possessed the same measure of merits as himself, having shown charity to a widow. The Bollandist Delehaye calls this story a hagiographic myth. F. 3 Dec. and 28 May., MGr. Mrt.

Theodulus, Saturninus, Euporus, Gelasius, Eunicianus, Zoticus, Pompejus, Agathopus, Basilides, and Evaristus, the "Ten Martyrs of Greece." They belonged to various cities in Crete, but were martyred under Decius. Their relics, in a later century, were brought to Rome. F. 23 Dec., Rom. Mart., full office in the Greek Church.—H. L.—Nill.—P. B.

Theofrid (Theofroy), Bp., C.; he was a monk at Luxeuil. In 662, he was elected abbot of Corbie; in 670, Bp. of Amiens (or Albi?); d. 9 Oct., 681. F. at Corbie, 9 Oct. (26 Jan.).—P. B.

Theofrid (Chaffre), M., abbot of Calmeliac (Saint-Chaffre). B. at Orange; he followed his uncle Eudon, the first abbot of Cameliac, to his monastery. D. 19 Oct., 732, in consequence of ill-treatment received at the hands of invading Saracens. F. 19 Oct., dp. at LePuy; Tr. rel., 17 Nov. simp. at S. Chaffre. He is identical with S. Teofredo or Joffredo (Gioffredo), patron of Cervera and Cherasco in Piedmont.—P. B.

Theofrid, monk and martyr at Lérins; d. in 645. F. 18 Nov.—P. B.

Theogenes, M., at Pozzuoli; v. S. Artemas, 25 Jan.

Theogenes, Bp. of Hippo Regius, Africa, 255–62, who at the synod of Carthage defended the unity of baptism. The Rom. Mart. seems to confound him with the leader of the martyrs of Laodicea. Some hagiologists say that St. Theogenes, with 36 of his flock, was put to death under the Emperor Valerian, about 255. Others assert that S. Theogenes of Hippo Regius, of St. Cyprian's council, died in peace and that the martyrs who died under Valerian belong to Laodicea, not to Africa. F. 26 Jan., Rom. Mart., dp. in the prov. of Algiers.—Comm.

Theogenes and 36 companions, Mm., at Laodicea in Phrygia. F. 26 Jan. Their existence is uncertain. Some authors claim that this S. Theogenes was bishop of Hippo Regius and that the 36 martyrs were Africans, not Laodiceans.—Chev.

Theoger (B.), Bp., C.; b. probably in Alsace; he was canon at Mayence, but took the Benedictine habit at Hirsau. Then he became prior at Reichenbach on the Murg and abbot of S. Georgen in the Black Forest (elected, 1088; blessed, 1090). In 1118, he was chosen bishop of Metz (consecrated 7 July, at Corbie), but never took possession of his church. D. at Cluny, 29 Apr., 1120.—H. L.

Theognes = S. Theagenes.

Theognes, Rufus, Antipater, Theostichus, Artemas, Magnus, Theodotus, Thamasius, and Philemon, Mm. They were beheaded at Cyzicus in Mysia, under Diocletian. Their relics were elevated under Constantine the Great and are celebrated for miracles. Parts of them are in the Cyzicus monastery, near Kasan, Russia. F. 28 Apr., full office in the Greek Church, 29 Apr., full office in the Russian Church.—Chev.—Mz.

Theognius, Bp., C.; b. at Araratia in Capadocia. After 454, he was a monk in Gethsemane monastery at Jerusalem; then he spent some years in the monastery of S. Theodosius in the desert of Juda, and near Der-Dosi, where his disciples erected a monastery. In 404, he was chosen bishop of Betalia, near Gaza. D. 8 Jan., 522.—Chev., 4435.—A. B., 10, 72.

Theognosta, V., abbess, called "the Roman." Under Honorius and Arcadius she was brought as a slave to India by some Indian ambassador; there she converted the king and founded a nunnery, in which she died. She may be identical with S. Nino. F. 14 Sept. in the Coptic Church.—Cal. Copt.—Syn., 32.

* Theognostus, Bp., C., a native of Greece; he was chosen metropolitan of Russia, in 1328, but suffered much from the Tatars, nian, in the fourth century. F. 30 Sept., Arm. Men.—Nill., II, 608.

Theonas, C., 16th Bp. of Alexandria, 281-300, called "Column of the Church"; he promoted the catechetical school of Alexandria and probably was the teacher of his successor, S. Peter. He excommunicated the Sabellians. Little else is known of his life. His cult is very ancient. F. 23 Aug., Rom. Mart.; 28 Dec. in the Coptic and Abyssinian Churches.—H. L.—Syn., 210 (28 Dec.)

Theonestus, Thabra, and Thabrata, Mm., at Altino in North-Eastern Italy. Theonestus (Theomnestus) was bishop of Philippi in Macedonia; driven from his see by the Arians, he came to Rome with his disciples Albanus, Ursus, Thabra and Thabrata under Pope Damasus. They were sent to preach to the Germans, and travelled over Milan and Gaul. Ursus died on the way. Shortly after their arrival at Mayence the city was destroyed by the Vandals (405 or 406) and Albanus was martyred. On their homeward journey they came to Altino (Venice), where the remaining three were killed by the Arians in 425. There is, however, probably not a particle of historic truth in this story. Theonestus and companions seem to be local saints of Altino, having no connection with S. Ursus and S. Alban of Mayence. The relics of Theonestus and his companions were transferred to Treviso and are venerated in the cathedral there; some parts are in the cathedral of Torcello. F. 20 Nov. dp. 2 cl. Theopemptus and Theodota, Mm. F. 2 Jan., MGr. Theodota is the alleged mother of Ss. Cosmas and Damian; it is doubtful who Theopemptus may have been; perhaps he was the bishop of Nicomedia, infra.

Theopemptus (Theopompos), Bp. of Nicomedia. He was thrown into a furnace and without experiencing any evil effect, drank poisons prepared by the magician Theonas, whereupon the latter believed in Christ. Theopemptus was beheaded (284), whilst Theonas was buried alive. Their relics were brought to Nonantula, Italy, in the 10th century. Galesius and others identify the two with Theopompus and Sinesius (21 May). The "acts" of both groups are unreliable and contain much fabulous matter. F. 3 Jan., Rom. Mart.; 5 Jan., full office in the Greek Church.—Comm.

Theopemptus, his wife, and companions, Mm.; they are identical with Theopemptus and Theonas. F. 7 March, Mz.

Theophanes, "the Confessor," abbot of Mt. Sigriane; b. about 748, at Constantinople. After the death of his parents he was educated by Emperor Constantine Copronymus. He gave all he had to the poor and became a monk in Polychronion monastery, Mt. Sigriane, in 780. His wife took the veil on Prince's Island, in the sea of Marmora. He founded a monastery on Kalonymos island and another on Mt. Sigriane, near Cyzicus, where he was chosen abbot, in 787. He wrote a chronography reaching from 258 to 813. Banished to Samothrace by the Iconoclast Emperor Leo the Armenian, he died there, 12 March, 818. F. 12 March, Rom. Mart.; in the Greek Church, full office.—Comm.—H. L. A. B., 5, 153.

* Theophanes of Mt. Athos, called "New Wonder Worker." B. at Janina in Albania; he was a monk and abbot at Dochiar, Mt. Athos. He brought back to the faith his apostate nephew and gave him the habit at Dochiar. Since the monks would not tolerate the returned apostate, he went with him to Berrhoea, where he founded a monastery; another at Nausa in Macedonia, some time between the 15th and 17th centuries. His relics are now at Nausa. F. 19 Aug., Mz.

Theophanes, "the Faster," C. B. of Greek parents; he attached himself to an anchorite in early youth and lived in a cave on Mt. Diabenos. D. about 300. His life is utterly unreliable. F. 9 Sept., Mz., Mrt.

Theophanes, "the Eleemosynary," C.; he lived at Gaza; although he had a wife and children, he gave all he possessed to the poor. Era unknown. A liquid (myron) flows from his bones. F. 29 Sept., MGr. Mz.

Theophanes Graptus, Archbp. of Nice. He was a monk in the laura of S. Sabas, near Jerusalem, and, with his brother Theodore Graptus, was exiled under Leo V (813-20) for defending the cult of images. Called home under Michael (820-29), Theophanes was again banished. Under Emperor Theophilus (829-42), he was repeatedly scourged, punished by having some verses punctured into his face (whence his surname Graptus, punctured), and exiled to Bithynia. He survived and was designated archbishop of Nice, in 842, by Empress Theodora. He composed many liturgical hymns. D. 11 Oct., 845. F. 11 Oct., full office in the Greek Church; 27 Dec., Rom. Mart.; 22 Sept., Rb. Sl.—H. L.—Biogr.

Theophanes, Papias, Strategius, and Jacob, Mm., at Constantinople, under the Iconoclast Emperor Leo the Armenian. They were court officers; for their defence of the Catholic belief in the veneration of images they were thrown into prison and put to the torture. Theophanes expired under it; the other three survived and dedicated themselves to the service of God in a monastery. F. 4 Dec., Rom. Mart.—Chev.—Rams.

Thomas of Aquino, C., O. P., the "Angelic Doctor," the chief exponent of Scholastic philosophy, which is fundamentally that of Aristotle, brought into harmony with the Christian Faith. B. at Roccasecca, north of Naples, in 1225; a nephew of Frederic I and Henry IV and cousin of Frederic II. At 5 years he became an oblate at Monte Cassino, but left the monastery in 1236, to continue his studies at Naples (university). In 1243, he took the habit of S. Dominic, much against the will of his mother. Trying to escape to Paris, in 1244, he was captured by his brothers and kept a prisoner for over a year at San Giovanni. Set free by command of the Emperor and the Pope, he was conducted to Paris by John the Teuton. At Paris, Albert the Great had just then commenced his activity. Thomas followed Albert to Cologne to finish his studies. From 1252 to 1260 he was professor at Paris. From 1261 to 1264 he lived at the court of Pope Urban IV. From 1265 to 1267 he directed the Dominican school at Rome, then the school at Viterbo. From 1269 to 1271 he taught at Paris for the second time. In 1263, he was sent to the Dominican chapter, which was held in London, as definitor of the Roman province. During his stay at Paris he combated the adversaries of the Mendicants and the Averroists. At that time also began his controversies with the Franciscan teachers. From 1272 to 1274 he was professor at the University of Naples. He died at the Cistercian monastery of Fossanuova, near Terracina, on his journey to the Council of Lyons, 7 March, 1274. He was canonized, 18 July, 1323, and declared a Doctor of the Church in 1567. He was one of the most marvellously gifted thinkers. In his philosophical and theological writings Scholasticism attained its highest perfection, for which reason he is called "the Prince of the School." He was the "most saintly among the learned and the most learned among the saints." His works on philosophy and theology are voluminous and have been republished again and again. To his metaphysical system the Church has given marked preference. The "Summa Theologica," his last but unfortunately uncompleted work, is that on which his reputation mainly rests. Notwithstanding its bulk it has passed through numerous editions, and deals with the whole of Catholic theology. He also composed the Office and Mass of Corpus Christi, which are gems of the Roman Liturgy. His relics were first brought to Fondi, but deposited at S. Sernin, Toulouse, 28 Jan., 1369. In 1880, he was declared patron of Catholic universities, colleges, and schools. F. 7 March dp. in the Latin Church since 1323. In 1262, he became chancellor of Oxford University and, in 1265, of all England. He resigned in 1268, and went to Paris to study theology, but after his return was forced to resume his duties as chancellor of England (1274). He was elected bishop of Hereford in June, 1275, and consecrated, 8 Sept., 1275, by Archbishop Kilwardby of Canterbury. To defend his rights against Archbishop Peckham, he went in person to Pope Martin IV, who then resided at Orvieto. He died on the way home, at Montefiascone, 2 Oct., 1282, and was canonized, 30 Apr., 1317. F. 2 Oct. and 14 Sept. (Tr. rel., 1287 and 1350); now at Newport, 3 Oct., dp. 2 cl. Thomas the Apostle, called Didymus, i. e., "the Twin." The Gospel records his unbelief after the Resurrection and his profession of Christ's Divinity (John XX, 25 ss.). Eusebius says that Thomas sent Thaddeus to Edessa and went himself to Parthia. Sophronius, quoted by S. Jerome, claims that he planted the standard of the Cross among the Medes, Persians, Hyrcanians, Bactrians, and neighboring nations. The later Greeks, following the apocryphal "acts," make him apostle of India. In fact there were lively trade connections between Syria and Northern India, by which Christianity may have been carried there and may have effected a transformation of Buddhism. Some traits of the otherwise apocryphal "acts" of Thomas have proved to be historical, e. g., Gundafor, the name of the king; Kantaria Gandhara, the place of his martyrdom, etc. According to Heraclion, Thomas died a natural death; according to the legend, he was executed by the sword or a lance. An apocryphal account names Calamina (near Meliapur?) as the place of his death. At Meliapur is venerated the miraculous cross of St. Thomas. (F. 18 Dec.). His tomb was known to Chrysostom at Edessa in Syria, to which city his relics may have been transferred from India in the fourth century. According to later accounts, his body was kept at Dir-Mar-Tuma monastery, near Maipharakin. In 1258, his relics are said to have been brought from Edessa to Chios, and from there to Ortona in Italy. That S. Thomas came to America cannot be proved and is improbable. F. in the Latin Church, 21 Dec. dp. 2 cl. Thomas à Becket, Archbp. of Canterbury, M. Born at London, 21 Dec., 1118. His parents had come from Normandy. His father was a merchant. He received his education at London and Paris. About 1141, he entered the service of Archbishop Theobald of Canterbury, who recognized his capacity, sent him to Bologna and Auxerre to study law and, in 1154, made him his archdeacon. The next year (1155) King Henry II (the two being "of one heart and one mind") appointed him his chancellor. After the death of Theobald (1161) Thomas was ordained priest and, 3 June, 1162, was named archbishop of Canterbury. He reluctantly accepted the appointment because the king insisted. As chancellor he had sometimes wavered and defended the prerogatives of the State against the Church; but after his consecration he resigned his chancellorship and strenuously fought for the independence of the Church against the encroachments of the Crown. He insisted upon the exemption of the clergy from secular jurisdiction and the immunity of church property. Against the articles of Clarendon (13 Jan., 1164), which he had at first signed, he took an attitude of uncompromising resistance. After a period of vindictive persecution, he (13 Oct., 1164) secretly fled to France, where he met Alexander III, at Sens (23 Nov.). From 1164 to 1167 he resided at the Cistercian abbey of Pontigny, but was driven from there by political pressure exercised by the English King. He took his abode at Sens (1167-70).

Shortly after his apparent reconciliation with the King at Rouen, and his return to England (1 Dec., 1170), he was assassinated in the transept of the cathedral of Canterbury, 29 Dec., 1170, by four knights, who had been indirectly instigated to the foul deed by Henry II. In the brief space of a few years the devotion to the martyred Archbishop spread all through Europe. The Pope canonized him a little more than two years after his martyrdom, on 21 Feb., 1173. For the remainder of the Middle Ages the shrine of S. Thomas became one of the wealthiest and most famous in Europe, until Henry VIII had S. Thomas convicted of high treason, his bones burnt, and his ashes scattered, 19 Aug., 1538. (This story may be apocryphal). F. in the Latin Church, 29 Dec. in England dp. 1 cl. oct. Thomas (B.), Earl of Lancaster, a cousin of King Edward II, "a martyr for the rights and liberties of the English people." Having ordered the execution of Gaveston, the king's minion, at Scarborough, in 1312, he fell into the hands of the Royalists at Boroughbridge, and was executed at York, 22 March, 1321. Miracles were wrought at his tomb in Ponfract. After the death of Edward II the canonization of Thomas of Lancaster was urged at Rome and the popular report has it that he was canonized in 1390.

His cult cannot be disputed. F. 22 March, Usuard and Greven.—St.

Thomas Abel (B.), M. He was a doctor of Oxford University, chaplain to Queen Catharine, and an energetic defender of the validity of her marriage to Henry VIII. He was sent to Spain with secret messages for Charles V, arrested for supporting the cause of the Holy Maid of Kent, and executed for high treason, at Smithfield, 30 July, 1540, with two Lutherans and two Catholic laymen (Dr. Powell and Dr. Fetherstone).—St.—Seeb.

Thomas More (Morus) (B.), M. Born at London, 7 Feb., 1478. At the age of thirteen, he entered the service of Archbishop Morton of Canterbury, who sent him to Oxford, where he devoted himself to humanistic studies. Later he studied law at London and became a renowned lawyer. Having given up the idea of joining the Franciscans, he married Jane Colte, in 1505, and, after her death, Alice Middleton, in 1510. He resided at Chelsea, where he gathered around himself a distinguished circle of poets, scientists, humanists, and lawyers. In 1504, he was elected to Parliament; in 1510, appointed undersheriff of London; in 1518, secretary to Henry VIII; in 1521, knighted. Being a clever diplomat, he was chosen speaker of Parliament, in 1523, and, in 1529, became Lord Chancellor of England, in place of Cardinal Wolsey. His reputation was European and his writings are distinguished alike by their learning and their orthodoxy. "Utopia," (first printed at Louvain in 1556), is the best of his works. When his pleadings in the divorce question and against the anti-Catholic tendencies of the King (supremacy oath) were in vain, he resigned. Implicated by the King in the affair of the Holy Maid of Kent, he was (April, 1534) sent to the Tower and, refusing to take the supremacy oath, sentenced for high treason and beheaded on Tower Hill, 6 July, 1535. He was the foremost defender of papal supremacy. His sunny cheerfulness, his precious humor, his gentleness and kindness of heart, his high-minded charity and forbearance, his eminent piety, keenness of intellect, intrepid courage and imperturbable tranquility of soul shone forth equally in prosperity, adversity and death. Little is left of his relics. He was beatified, with 53 English martyrs, 29 Dec., 1886. F. at Westminster, 9 July, dp. maj.; 30 July dp. 3rd O. F. M. Regular. St.—H. L.—Rams.—Auss.

Timothy (Timotheus), M., at Sirmium; v. Maximinianus, 2 Jan.

* Timothy, Bp. of Edessa, C.; d. about 760. F. 15 Jan., Rb. Sl.

Timothy, M., Bp. of Ephesus, the most intimate disciple of S. Paul. B. at Lystra in Lycaonia; his father was a Gentile, his mother, Eunice, a Jewess. S. Paul took the young man as companion of his labors, but, in condescension to the prejudices of the Jews, first had him circumcised. He left him at Berrhoea, but soon afterwards sent him to Thessalonica. Later on T. joined Paul at Corinth. From Ephesus he was sent to Macedonia, from there back to Corinth, to correct certain abuses. He appears to have been with S. Paul during the Apostle's first Roman imprisonment. After this captivity he probably continued with S. Paul, accompanied him to Ephesus, and was consecrated by him bishop of that city, about 64. S. Paul wrote 1 Tim. to him from Macedonia, in 64; 2 Tim., in 65, from Rome. Timothy afterwards attached himself to S. John and in the Apocalypse is the Angel of the Church of Ephesus. The accounts of his subsequent life and his death are spurious. According to tradition, pagans fell upon him during the feast of Katagogii in honor of Diana, and stoned him. He died of his wounds three days later, 22 Jan., 97. The Greeks call him "Apostle." His relics were brought to Constantinople, in 358; now they are partly at Rome, in San Giovanni in Fonte. S. Rasso is said to have transferred his body from Constantinople to Mt. Andechs in Bavaria, in 949, but it was not identified at the finding of relics there, in 1383. He is patron against diseases of the stomach. F. in the Greek and Syrian Churches, 22 Jan., full office; in the Latin Church (perhaps since the 13th century), 24 Jan. dp.; Tr. rel., 9 May, Rom. Tinidor = S. Tenenan, 16 July.—P. B.

Tipasian Martyrs. They were Catholics, whom the Arian king of the Vandals, Hunneric, in 483, mutilated because they refused to acknowledge the Arian bishop of Tipasa. In spite of their mutilation (tongue cut out), they were able to speak. The miracle is recorded by two reliable eye-witnesses, Aeneas of Gaza and Victor of Vita.—H. L.—C. E.

Tipasius, M., a Roman soldier (veteran) in Africa; he had retired to the desert to practice works of piety. Called to arms again during the campaign against the Quingentani, in the Mauretanian province of Sitifis, he refused to serve and to sacrifice to the gods, and was beheaded, 11 Jan., 304, at Tigava in Africa. The substance of his "acts" is genuine. Pieces from his shield were applied to those who were possessed by demons. F. 11 Jan., Hier. Mart.—Chev.—A. B., 9, 107.

Tirechan, Bp. in Ireland; he is said to have been Bp. of Ardbreacain and wrote a life of

S. Patrick; 7th century. F. 3 July.—O'H., VII., 44.

Tiriac = S. Tauricius.

Tiridat (Trdat) III, king of Armenia ("the Armenian Constantine"), 282-329. After the assassination of his father, Chosrow the Great, he was educated at Rome. He regained the throne with Roman assistance and persecuted the Christians (Rhipsime, Gajana, etc.). Delivered of intense sufferings by S. Gregory Illuminator, he believed, was baptized, and led his entire nation to the faith. He is said to have been poisoned by dissolute nobles, in 329. F. 29 Nov., together with that of his wife, S. Ashkhenia, and his sister, S. Khosrowidukht, full office, 5th Monday after Pentecost. His name is in the diptychs of the Armenian Mass.—Fort., 397.—Nill., II, 585.

Titulus, reputed M. at Terni; v. S. Apollonius, 14 Apr.

Titulus, M., in Syria; v. S. Fortunatus, 14 Aug.

Titus, Bp., a disciple of S. Paul. B. at Antioch (?), of gentile parents; converted by S. Paul (?), he was his companion (secretary and interpreter) on his journey to the Council of the Apostles at Jerusalem (51). Twice he was sent to Corinth on difficult missions. In 64 he was sent by S. Paul to organize the church on the isle of Crete (he was a brother-in-law of the governor of Crete). In the winter of 65-66 he was with S. Paul at Nicopolis (Epirus), also, for a time, at Rome, during the latter's second Roman captivity. Later, he was sent to Dalmatia. His later life is uncertain; he may have died at Gortyna (Crete), 25 Aug., 94. His relics in the cathedral of Gortyna were burnt when the city was destroyed by the Saracens, in 823. His head was brought to Venice. F. 4 Jan., Rom. Mart. (F. of the 72 Disciples in the Greek Church, 4 Jan.); formerly in Venice and Dalmatia, 19 Jan.; in the Latin Church, (since 18 May, 1854), 6 Feb. dp.; in the Greek and Syrian Churches, 25 Aug., full office (with S. Bartholomew); in Armenia, 29 July in the Coptic Church, 14 Dec. He is patron of Crete, 4 Jan. dp. 1 cl. oct.—Scherin.—Buch.—C. E.

Titus, Satyrus, and Mamaeus, Mm. F. at Nicomedia, 25 Jan., Old Syr. Mart.—Achel., 39.

* Titus of Petschera, C. He was a priest in the Cave monastery at Kiev. He was hated by the deacon Evagrius, who refused to be reconciled with him even when Titus was dying. Evagrius was punished with sudden death; 12th century. F. 27 Feb.—Mrt.—Mz.

Titus, "the Wonder Worker," C. He was a monk at or near Constantinople in the 7th or 8th centuries; he combatted the Iconoclast heresy. F. 2 Apr., full office in the Greek Church.—MGr.

Titus, a Roman deacon, M. When the city was sacked by the Goths, he strove to succor the defenseless inhabitants and was killed by a Teutonic soldier whilst distributing alms (410). The name of this Titus was first inserted in the Roman Martyrology at the time when it was re-edited by Cardinal Baronius. It is not clear that St. Titus died during the sack of Rome, in 410, by the Visigoths, though it must be conceded that he ended as a martyr, probably a victim of one of the frequent massacres perpetrated by the barbarians, who overran Italy at that period. St. Prosper of Aquitaine dates the death of this holy deacon at 425; and it would seem that he was executed not at Rome, but elsewhere in Italy. His relics are at Casorate in the diocese of Milan. F. 16 Aug., Rom. Mart.—H. L.

Toribio = S. Turibius.

Torman, The Sons of; mentioned in the Martyrology of Donegal, 10 March.—O'H., III, 292.

Torpes (Tropez), M. His "acts," possibly founded on a genuine tradition, are a forgery. Torpes was a Christian at Pisa, an early convert made at the time of the Apostles. He suffered martyrdom under Nero, probably about 65. But the legends we have about him are very unreliable. When the wild animals would not hurt him, he was beheaded, and his body cast into the Arno River. It came ashore at "Sinus," a term broad enough to cover several places: the "Sinus Pisanus," near the mouth of the Arno; the gulf of Grimaud (now Golfe de S. Tropez), on the Provençal coast, and Sines, a village in the diocese of Evora, Portugal. But the church of S. Tropez (Fréjus) was originally dedicated to S. Eutropius. The relics of S. Torpes at Sines are spurious. His head is at Pisa in the church of S. Lusorio. He is one of the patrons of the Republic of Pisa and invoked against drought and pestilence. F. 29 Apr., dp. 2 cl. at Pisa; Tr. rel. 17 May, simpl. Rom. Mart.; 17 May. at Fréjus dp.; in the Biervary of Eborac (1548) dp.—P. B.—H. L.—Off. pr.

Trucharius, M., at Capraja; v. S. Aigulf, 3 Sept.

Trudo (Trond, Trutjen, Tryen, Tron), priest, C. Born about 630 in the Belgian Haspengau, of a noble Frankish family. S. Remacius sent him to the cathedral school of Metz, where S. Chlodulf ordained him priest, in 655. S. Remacius commissioned him to preach the Gospel in the diocese of Maestricht. On his paternal estate at Sarcinium he founded a monastery, later on called S. Trond (in 660). D. 23 Nov., 695. His relics, with those of S. Eucherius, were elevated in 880; lost in 1085, they were found again, 12 Aug., 1169. F. 23 Nov., Rom. Mart., dp. at Liège (23 Nov.) and at Metz (27 Nov.); Tr. rel. at S. Trond, 12 Aug.—H. L.—Mg.—P. B.

Trudpert, M. He is said to have come from Ireland, but some consider him a German. He settled in the valley of Neumagen (Breisgau), where Count Otbert assisted him in building a chapel. One of his workmen killed the saint, 26 Apr., 607. Later legends make Trudpert a brother of S. Rupert and of Otbert, the ancestor of the house of Hapsburg. His relics were elevated in 816. Over his tomb were built the church and monastery of S. Trudpert (dissolved in 1806). No secure judgment can be formed of the era in which he lived and of his work. F. 26 Apr.; dp. in the diocese of Freiburg, 27 Apr.—H. L.—H. D.

Trumwin, Bp., C. He was an Anglo-Saxon and a monk of Whitby; S. Theodore consecrated him bishop of the Southern Picts, in 681. * Tryphon of Wjatka, abbot; b. in Nemi-geshki, government of Archangelsk in Northern Russia; he was a monk at Piskora and evangelized the pagans on the River Wjatka (Ural), where he founded two monasteries. D. in 1612. F. 8 Oct., Mrt. Mz.

Tryphon, M. He was a gooseherd in the village of Campsada near Apamea in Syria. Under Decius he was brought to Nice, and, refusing to sacrifice to the gods, was tortured and beheaded, in 251. According to Metaphrastes, he was called to Rome to deliver the daughter of Emperor Gordianus of an evil spirit and was martyred at Rome. Later on the legend was still more embellished. His "acts" are fictitious. Since the 11th century Respius appears in connection with Tryphon, either as a countryman of the latter or as an imperial officer, who was converted by the boy's fortitude. Respius may be a product of fancy. Tryphon is patron against evil spirits, also against insects. Where his genuine relics are, is difficult to say. F. in the Latin Church, simpl., 10 Nov. (Rom. Mart.), the day of the deposition of his relics in S. Maria in Sassia, Rome. In the church of S. Augustine (Rome), dp. 1 cl. oct.; his relics under the high-altar, were brought there from the leveled church of S. Trifone in Posterula; in the Greek Church, S. Tryphon alone has the full office of Febr. 1. At Cerignola (tr. rel. in 1817) Pmp. (d. 2 cl.) 1 Feb. The Church of Cattaro in Dalmatia claims that his relics were brought there from Constantinople and keeps these five feasts: 3 Feb. dp. 1 cl. oct. (princ. patron); 10 Nov. dp. maj.; Tr. of his body, 14 Jan. dp. maj.; Tr. of his head, 20 Nov. dp. maj.; F. of his patronage, 7 June dp. maj. In the church of S. Augustine, Rome, 28 Sept., Tr. rel.—Leg.—St., 48, 66.—Passions, 411.—Ruin., 207.—H. L.

* Tryphon of Kola, abbot; b. at Nowgorod, in 1495; with the assistance of the grand-duke he founded the monastery of Kola, in 1558. He is the Apostle of the Laps on the peninsula of Kola; while preaching the Gospel, he penetrated as far as the North Cape in Norway. D. in 1583. F. 15 Dec., Mrt. Mz.

Tryphon, M., a priest, who was hanged to a willow tree. F. 19 Dec., MGr.

Tryphonia, Matron, M. She probably was the wife of a son of Decius, Messius Decius, for the Emperor's wife was Herenia Cupressenia Etruscilla. Messius Decius killed his wife and daughter when he found they were Christians. Her "acts" are worthless. She was buried at Rome in the crypt of S. Hippolytus (in agro Verano), with her daughter Cyrilla. F. 18 Oct., Rom. Mart., in the Capuchin Church at Rome dp. 22 Oct.; v. Cyrilla, 28 Oct.

Tutus, M., in Phrygia; v. S. Tarsus, 27 Oct.

Twelve Brothers, Mm., called the "Southern Martyrs." According to the Italian legend they were natives of Adrumetum in Africa, sons of Ss. Boniface and Thecla. They were brought to Carthage and, after the usual torture, sent to Italy, chained together by their necks. There they were executed: Honoratus, Fortunatus (Fortunianus), Arontius (Orontius), and Savinianus at Potenza, 27 Aug.; Septimius, Januarius, and Felix, at Venosa, 28 Aug.; Vitalis, Satur, and Repositus, at Vellejanum, 29 Aug.; Felix and Donatus, at Sentianum, 1 Sept. In 760, Duke Arechis collected the relics of these martyrs and brought them (15 May) to the church of S. Sophia, Benevento, where their feast on the 1 Sept. dp. 1 cl. oct.; Tr. rel. 15 May. These saints were not brothers, but various Apulian martyrs, whom the legend, after their translation, brought into this intimate connection. They have nothing in common with one another, nor with S. Boniface and Thecla of Adrumetum. The martyrs beheaded at Venosa were connected with S. Felix of Tubzacene in Africa. F. (not ancient), 1 Sept., Rom. Ulric (Ulfrick, Walfrick), hermit, C. He was a native of Bristol; though a priest, he led a worldly life; converted by a beggar, he retired to the solitude of Hazelbrough, Dorsetshire, where he d. 20 Feb., 1154. His tomb was a famous shrine in the Middle Ages. F. 20 Feb.—St.

Ulric, Bp. of Augsburg, C. Born at Augsburg, in 890, of the counts of Dillingen-Kyburg; he was educated at St. Gall, where S. Wiborada guided him. He returned to Augsburg, in 908, without having taken any vows at St. Gall. His uncle, Bishop Adalbero, made him his chamberlain and steward. After Adalbero's death (909), Ulric retired to his estates and remained in obscurity for 14 years. After Bishop Hiltine's death, through family's influence, he was designated for the see of Augsburg and consecrated, 28 Dec., 923. He developed a restless activity as temporal and spiritual ruler, restored discipline by visitations, synods, and courts, by preaching and his own personal sanctity. He reformed the monasteries and rebuilt the ruined churches, especially the cathedral and S. Afra. He surrounded the city with strong walls, defended the rights of Otto I against Liudolf, duke of Suabia (peace of Illertissen, 954), and took an active part in the final defeat of the Hungarians, 10 Aug., 955. D. at Augsburg, 4 July, 973, and was buried in the crypt of S. Afra's church, now called S. Ulric's. His canonization (3 Feb., 993) was the first formal and solemn canonization ever held. Ulric of Zell, or of Cluny, C.; b. at Ratisbon, in 1029. Emperor Henry III was his godfather. He was archdeacon and provost for his uncle, Bishop Notker of Freising. In 1046, he accompanied the Emperor to Rome.

After a pilgrimage to the Holy Land and a second journey to Rome, he (with S. Gerald of Ostia), in 1061, took the Benedictine habit at Cluny. Later on he was prior and confessor at Marcigny. In 1073, he founded a priory on the Rüggersberg, canton Bern. In 1078, he was appointed prior of the new establishment of Grüningen, Baden, which he removed into a valley of the Black Forest now called S. Ulric's. D. 14 July, 1093. Urbanus II (Odon de Lagery B.), C., Pope, 12 March 1088–99. B. at Chatillon-sur-Marne, in 1042. He was first canon, then archdeacon at Reims. In 1070, he took the Benedictine habit at Cluny, where he was chosen prior. He was called to Rome by Gregory VII and created Cardinal-Bishop of Ostia, in 1078. In 1084, he was sent to Germany as papal legate. After his election (coronation at Terracina) he declared his intention of following the policy and example of Gregory VII. In Nov., 1088, he entered Rome (S. Bartolomeo), excommunicated Henry IV and the Antipope Clement III, and, in December, took possession of S. Peter's. He was repeatedly compelled to leave Rome and to seek protection against Clement in Lower Italy, where, at the Synod of Melfi (autumn 1089), he issued decrees against simony, lay investiture, and clerical marriage. He entered the Lateran in time for the Paschal solemnity, in 1094, and six years after his election at Terracina, sat for the first time on the papal throne. At the synod of Clermont, Nov., 1095, he added to the prohibition of lay investiture a decree forbidding the clergy to render homage to a layman. King Philip I of France was excommunicated in his own country. By the enthusiasm created at this synod for the Holy Land, Urban became the originator of the crusades. A crusaders' army reestablished him in Rome, but he did not come into possession of the Mausoleum of Hadrian before 1098. In 1098, he held a synod at Bari, where S. Anselm defended the "Filioque" against the Greeks. D. at Rome, 29 July, 1099. Beatified, 14 July, 1881. Urbanus V (Guillaume de Grimoard), (B.), O. S. B., C., Pope, 28 Oct. 1362–70. B. at Griscas, in Languedoc, in 1310. He became a Benedictine monk at Chiriac. He was one of the greatest canonists of his day and was professor of law at Montpellier, Toulouse, Paris, and Avignon. Having affiliated himself to Cluny, he was appointed abbot of S. Germain d'Auxerre by Clement VI, in 1352. He was legate for Clement VI (to Milan) and for Innocent VI, in 1362 (to Naples). He was crowned at Avignon, 6 Nov., 1362. Upon the prayers of the Romans, Petrarca, Charles IV, and S. Brigid, he returned to Rome in spite of the remonstrances of the French court. There he received the Greek Emperor John Paleologus into the Church, 18 Oct., 1369, but the hostility of Barnabo Visconti and other reasons induced him to return to Avignon, in September, 1370, where he died, 19 Dec., 1370. Ursula, V., with 11,000 companions, Mm., at Cologne. The legend "Regnante Domino" (980) relates: Ursula, daughter of King Deonotus, of Britain, was asked in marriage by a pagan prince. Desiring to remain a virgin, by divine inspiration she put to the prince the following conditions: a respite of three years, the building of eleven ships, ten noble virgins as associates, with one thousand companions each. During the regular nautical practices of the 11,000 maidens a storm arose and drove the ships to Batavia. From there the maidens sailed up the Rhine as far as Bâle; from there they went on foot to Rome. Having visited the holy places, they returned northward. When they arrived at Cologne, they found the city besieged by the Huns. Refusing to marry the leader of the Huns, Ursula, and with her all her companions, were slain by the barbarians. But legions of angels drove the Huns away; the citizens of Cologne buried the saints and built a church in their honor which, later on, was restored by a nobleman, Clematius. Possibly certain virgins, apparently few in number (eleven?), suffered martyrdom at Cologne (in 304?). Nothing was known of them about 840, save what was recorded on the Clematian stone on the restoration of the chapel (355). In the 9th century the leaders of the virgins were: Pinnosa, Saula, and Martha. In a Missal of Essen, eleven names appear, amongst them, for the first time, Ursula. Wandelbert speaks of "thousands." The number 11,000 first appears in the 10th century (probable origin of the number: XI MM VV, i.e., "eleven virgins martyrs," was interpreted: XI Millia Virginum, i.e., "11,000 virgins"). In the visions of S. Elizabeth of Schoenau (12th century) and of B. Herman Joseph, Pope Cyriacus (who never existed), the patriarch of Antioch, and many bishops, dukes, warriors etc., accompanied the virgins to Cologne and were killed with them. The legend, which originated amongst the Germans, may be a religious version of the Nibelungen myth. The bones shown in the church of S. Ursula at Cologne are remains taken out of the ancient city cemetery, unearthed principally in the 12th century. F. in the Rom. Valentine, M., at Brescia; v. S. Valerianus, 12 Feb.

Valentine, M., a Roman priest and physician. For his apostolic zeal he was beheaded on the Via Flaminia, in 269, and buried on the estate of Sabinilla; his tomb was in the cemetery named after him on the Flaminian Way. In the 4th century a basilica was built over it, to which his relics were transferred in the 7th century. From the 9th to the 14th century a Benedictine monastery was connected with his basilica; in the 14th century it fell into ruins. The body of the saint, at the end of the 13th century, had been brought to S. Prassede (chapel of S. Zenone). He may be identical with S. Valentine of Terni. S. Valentine's day is especially consecrated to lovers, because, according to a belief generally received in England and France during the Middle Ages, the birds begin to pair on the 14th of February. F. 14 Febr., Rom. Mart.; simpl. in the Latin Church; dp. 2 cl. at Fulda; dp. 1 cl. oct. (princ. patron) in the diocese of Przemyśl in Galicia, and of Trujillo, Peru.—Unt. Rom., 85.—C. E.—Comm.

Valentine, M., Bp. of Terni (Interamna); according to an unreliable tradition he was b. at Rome, consecrated bishop of Terni in Umbria by S. Felicianus of Foligno, and beheaded near Rome, about 273. His body was brought to Terni by his disciples: Proculus, Ephebus, and Apollonius. He seems to be the renowned Roman martyr of this name. He is patron against epilepsy. F. 14 Feb., Rom. Vando, 13th abbot of Saint-Vandrille, near Vaudebec, Normandy; d. in 756. F. 17 Apr.—P. B.

Vandobert (Vambert), M. A parish priest at Saint-Pierre-sur-Dive in the diocese of Bayeux, who was killed by the Normans in the 9th century. F. 26 June.—P. B.

Vandrille = S. Wandregisil.

Vaningus = S. Waneng.

Vanna, V., of Orvieto = Bl. Jane of Orvieto, 23 July.

Vannes = S. Vitonus of Verdun, 14 Nov.

Vannes. The diocese of Vannes in Brittany, France, on the 2nd Sunday of July kept the feast of All the Holy Bishops, Patrons and Other Saints of the diocese. This feast was abolished in 1914 by the Roman authorities.

Varagus and companions, Mm., in Henchir Djenen Khrouf, near Tebessa, in Mauretania, Africa. F. 11 June.—Del. Or., 449.

Varda (Rose), a Persian V., and Daniel. Mm.; after three month's imprisonment and torture they were beheaded, under Shapur II, in 344. F. 21 (25) Feb.—Pers.—H. L.

Vardan Mamikonian and companions, Mm. (Vardanist Martyrs), in Armenia. Vardan was a grandson of the Katholikos S. Sahak II, and leader of his country's army. To avert a general persecution of the Armenian nation, he denied his faith before Isdegerd, king of Persia. But when he became conscious of his sin, he placed himself at the head of the insurrection (Vardanite War) and was slain with 1036 warriors in the battle of Awarair, 2 June, 450. He is the national hero of his people. The feast of the Vardanist Martyrs is the patronal feast of the Armenian nation. F. 7 Aug. Office: Thursday after Sexagesima.—Nill., II, 575.—Web., 433.—Arm.

Variacus, M., in Africa; v. S. Secundus, 15 Nov.

Varinus (Guérin), abbot of N. D. d'Aulps and Bp. of Sion, 6 Jan.—P. B., I, 164.

Varus, abbot in Armenia; v. S. Thatulus, 30 Sept.

Varus and companions, Mm. Varus was a Christian warrior in Egypt, who during the persecution visited the imprisoned Christians. Whilst attending to the needs of seven monks (teachers), he witnessed the death of one of them in the dungeon, and insisted on taking his place, wherefore he was arrested, tortured, and hanged to a tree; finally his bowels were cut out, in 307. Next day the monks were tortured and beheaded. Their "acts" are ancient and trustworthy. F. 19 Oct., Rom. Mart., in the Greek Church, full office.—H. L. Rams.—Eg. 84.

* Varus (Apori, Ori), of Setnuf in Egypt, under Maximian; perhaps he is identical with the Varus of 19 Oct. F. 2 Aug.—Cal. Copt.

Vasius (Vaise), M.; b. in Saintonge, France. When he desired to leave the world and give all he had to the poor, his relatives took his property away from him. He appealed to the Visigoth ruler Alaric, whereupon they killed him, in 490. His relics are at S. Vaize. F. 16 Apr. dp. at LaRochele. —P. B.

Vatopedi. In the great monastery of Vatopedi on Mt. Athos, on 4 Jan., is celebrated the memory of many holy monks.—Mrt.

Vaubert = S. Walbert.

Vaubry = S. Valeric, 8 July.

Vedast (Vaast, Vaat, Gaston, Foster). Bp. C.; b. probably at Périgueux, in Southern France. He is said to have instructed King Clovis in the faith after the battle of Tolbiac, and to have assisted S. Rémi in converting the Franks. S. Rémi, in 510, consecrated him bishop of Arras and Cambrai. He restored the Christian religion and rebuilt the ruined cathedral and many churches. D. at Arras, 6 Feb., 540. In 666, his relics were brought from the cathedral to the Benedictine monastery of S. Vaast; in the 9th century to Beauvais, but later on were restored to Arras. He is one of the popular saints of the Middle Ages. F. 6 Feb., Rom. Mart.; at Arras (princ. patron of the diocese), dp. 1 cl. oct.; dp. 2 cl. at Cambrai; Can. Reg. dp.; at Arras, Tr. rel. 5 Oct.—L. S.—P. B.—Mg.

Vedulf, C., Bp. of Cambrai and Arras, successor of S. Dominic, about 545; he transferred the see from Arras to Cambrai; d. about 580. F. 27 March.—P. B.

Veep, Bp., C. = S. Fiacc.—B. G., IV, 349.

Veep (Veepy, Wimp, Wennapa), V., in the 6th century. She is the patron saint of St. Veop, Cornwall. St. Veep (in Welsh Gwenagwy) was a daughter of Caw, chief in North Britain, and a sister of S. Samson of Dol. Driven south by the Picts, with others of her family, she settled in Cornwall, where place-names still recall her memory. F. July 1.—Rams.

Vellesius, Bp.; v. S. Faustinus, 20 May.

Venantius, M. His relics were brought from Rome to Buchau, diocese of Fulda, under Louis the Pious (Débonnaire); later on they were transferred with those of Ss. Rusticus and Matthias, Ap., to Goslar. F. 1 Apr. at Goslar (solemn, Brev., 1522); Tr. rel. 16 Nov.—Grot.

Venantius, Bp., M. He occupied a see (Salona?) in Dalmatia; era unknown, perhaps 250–257. Pope John IV brought his body from Spalatro to the Lateran Basilica (S. Giovanni in Fonte), in 641, and built an oratory there in his honor. F. 1 Apr., Rom. Mart.; at Spalatro, simpl.; in the Lateran church, dp.—Anal. Bolland., 33, 265.—H. L.

Venantius, M., at Camerino in Italy. According to his legend he was arrested at the age of fifteen and thrown to the wild beasts, but they did not touch him. He was then dragged over thorns, thrown down a precipice, and his head struck off. His name does not occur in the ancient martyrologies. His "Passion," written in the 13th century, is nearly identical with the "Passion" of S. Agapitus of Praeneste, and manifestly apocryphal. Probably the spurious life of S. Venantius, bishop in Dalmatia (1 Apr.), was the common source for the lives of S. Agapitus and S. Venantius. In 1259, Manfred took the relics to Sicily, but Charles of Anjou restored them to Camerino. S. Venantius is patron of the duchy, diocese, and city of Camerino. F. 18 May, Rom. Mart.; dp. in the Latin Church (since 23 Aug., 1670, because Clement X had been bishop of Camerino). At Camerino, dp. 1 cl. oct.; 28 March, Finding and Tr. of his relics, dp. mai. He is also patron of Fabriano.—P. B.—C. E.—Buch.—H. L.

Venantius of Arles, France, C., elder brother of S. Honoratus, with whom he led an eremitical life on an island near Cannes. On their journey to the East, to study monastic life and rule, he died at Methone (Modon) in Messenia (Morea), about 400. F. 30 May.—P. B.—Mg.

Venantius, Bp., C. Nothing is known of him but his name and his cult at Albacina, diocese of Fabriano. F. dp. 7 June, in the dioceses of Fabriano, Luni, and Brugnato; at Albacina, dp. 1 cl. oct.: 14 July, Finding of his relics dp. maj.—H. L.

Venantius, C., Bp. of Viviers, an alleged son of S. Sigismund, king of Burgundy; b. about 490; converted from Arianism by S. Avitus of Vienne, he became a monk at Viviers. After a pilgrimage to Rome, he was elected bishop of Viviers, about 517. He was present at the synod of Clermont, in 535. D. in 544. His relics were brought to Soyon in the 12th century. F. 5 Aug. simpl. at Valence; 9 Aug. dp. at Viviers.—P. B.—Mg.

Venantius, M.; he was a knight; wounded at a tournament, he left the world and led a solitary life on the River Lys, in Artois, near Petersbergh. He was the spiritual guide of S. Isberga and was killed by two servants of S. Isberga's suitor, in the 8th century. F. 10 Oct. dp. in Arras.—P. B.—Mg.

Venantius, abbot of S. Martin's at Tours. B. in Perri; he possessed the gift of working miracles. He lived in the 5th century. His relics, at S. Venance's, Tours, were elevated in 1651. He is patron against fever. F. 13 Oct., Rom. Mart.; dp. at Tours; simpl. at Bourges and Luçon.—P. B.

Venantius, M., companion of S. Maximus, at Cività di Penne, Italy, Abbruzzo Ulteriori, who preached the faith at Pescara. F. 27 Oct. P. B.

Venantius Fortunatus (Honorius, Clementianus), Bp., C.; b. at Duplicabilis near Treviso in Northern Italy; he was educated at Ravenna. Having visited the tomb of S. Martin, he settled at Poitiers, where he was ordained priest and elected bishop, after 594. He is the author of many poems (11 books), amongst them the "Vexilla Regis" and "Pange Lingua" in honor of the Holy Cross. He entered into the closest friendship with Queen S. Radegundis and was in literary communication with most of his eminent contemporaries. D. shortly after 600. F. 14 Dec. dp. maj. at Poitiers and Luçon; dp. at Padua and Ceneda.—C. E.—Buch.—Rams.—Biogr.

Venatius (Eunopius or Rufinus), and his son Andrew, Mm. B. at Lydda; they were monks in Syria, later on in Egypt under S. Macarius. Venatius was consecrated bishop, Andrew ordained priest. They were martyred under Julian the Apostate. F. 20 Sept. in the Coptic Church.—Syn., 41.

Vendimianus (Bendemianus), a hermit; b. in Mysia (Asia Minor), he became a disciple of S. Auxentius (14 Feb.) on Mt. Siopa, near Chalcedon; after the death of his master he lived in a hut for 42 years. D. in 512. F. 1 Feb., MGr., Mz.

Vendemius, a monk and disciple of B. Aegydius (Giles). F. 25 Nov.—H. L.

Venedimus (Menedemus), M., at Athens; v. S. Heraclius, 18 May.

Veneranda (Venera), V., a follower of S. Herina of Lecce. F. 5 May.—P. B.

Veneranda, V., princ. patroness of the diocese of Durazzo in Albania. F. 25 July dp. 1 cl. oct.; in the diocese of Gerace (minor patr.), dp. maj., 28 July. At Carfizzi, diocese of Cariati (Calabria), 14 Nov. dp. 1 cl. oct.; dp. at Cattaro in Dalmatia. These local cults in Sicily, Albania, Dalmatia, the Roman Campagna, and Calabria represented the cult of S. Parasceve of Iconium.—Off. pr.

Veneranda (Venera), V., M. Her "acts" are spurious. They assert that she was a Christian woman, born in Gaul, who passed some part of her life in Rome and was zealous in spreading the faith. She is said to have suffered martyrdom in Rome (Gaul?) about the middle of the second century. Her cult is unknown in France, although the Rom. Mart., 14 Nov., assigns her to Gaul. The tradition of Aci Reale, in Sicily, claims that she was born at Aci, not in Gaul, and that she suffered martyrdom at Aci, not at Rome. She appears to be identical with S. Parasceve of Iconium. Her Greek name is Parasceve. She was formerly called S. Venera, Parasceve being the Greek, "Dies Veneris," the Latin name for "Friday." F. at Aci Reale (princ. patron) dp. 1 cl. oct. 26 July (feastday of S. Parasceve); 14 Nov., Tr. rel. dp. maj.—Off. pr. Rams.—H. L.—

Veneranda Parasceve, V., M. F. first Sunday of August (now 14 Nov.), dp. maj. at Sezze. This saint probably is identical with S. Parasceve of Iconium. F. at Grotte, diocese of Girgenti, 14 Nov. It seems that Greek colonists brought the cult of S. Parasceve-Veneranda from their home to various localities in Italy (Sicily).—Off. pr.

Venerandus, C., Bp. of Clermont. B. about 350, of a senatorial family of the Auvergne; he succeeded S. Artemius in the see of Clermont. D. 24 Dec., 423. His relics are in the monastic church of S. Allyre, where they were elevated, 22 Dec., 1311. F. 18 Jan.; 22 Dec. dp. at Clermont.—P. B.—Mg.

Venerius, archbp. of Milan. C. He was ordained deacon by S. Ambrose and, in 400, succeeded S. Simplicianus in the see of Milan. He was a friend of S. Chromatius of Aquileja and of S. Delphinus of Bordeaux, and a partisan of S. John Chrysostom. D. in 409. His relics were brought from the church of the Apostles to the cathedral by S. Charles, in 1579. F. 4 May, Rom. Mart.; solemn at Milan.—Comm.—H. L.

Venerius, M., at Ostia; v. S. Censurinus, 23 Aug.

Venerius, hermit and abbot, C. B. on the island of Palmaria, in the gulf of Genoa. He took the Benedictine habit and led a solitary life on Tino island. Perhaps he was also abbot on Palmaria island. His "acts" are unreliable. His relics, in the 9th century, were brought to Reggio d'Emilia, and elevated in 1627. F. 13 Sept., Rom. Mart.; dp. at Genoa, Savona, and Ajaccio; at Reggio d'Emilia (minor patr.), dp. maj.; Tr. rel. 3 Nov. dp.—Off. pr.—H. L.—Mg.

Verena, V., M., of the mythical cycle of St. Ursula. F. 22 July at Cologne.—Gel.—A. S.

Verena, V. According to her untrustworthy legend she was a native of Thebes in Upper Egypt, who undertook a pilgrimage to Agaunum in Switzerland, to visit the tombs of the Theban Martyrs (or in search of a soldier who was related to her); from St. Maurice (Agaunum) she went to Solothurn; near this town she lived in a grotto, spending her time in works of piety and charity. From Solothurn she journeyed to Coblenz (Switzerland), then to Zurzach in the Aargau. She taught the ignorant population by word and example and died in her cell at Zurzach. Her real story and era are unknown; probably she was not a contemporary, nor in any way connected with, the martyrs of Agaunum. Her relics are in the collegiate church at Zurzach (not Zurich). Veronica (Berenice). M., at Antioch; v. S. Prosdoce, 20 Apr., 11 July.

Veronica Giuliani, V., Capuchin abbess at Città di Castello, Umbria. B. at Mercatello, diocese of Urbino, 27 Dec., 1660. She took the vows in the Capuchin convent at Città di Castello (in 1678). Of deep mystical disposition, she was blessed with visions, received the impression of the Crown of Thorns (1694) and the stigmata of Christ (on Good Friday, 1697). She suffered the pains of Christ's Passion in a manner perceptible to others, wherefore she was called "the Spouse of the Crucified." Upon the command of her confessor she wrote her own life. D. at Città di Castello, 9 July, 1727. Beatified in 1804; canonized in 1839. F. 9 July, Rom. Mart., dp. maj. O. F. M.; at Città di Castello dp. 2 cl.; at S. Angelo in Vado and Urbana (minor patr.), dp. maj.; at Treja dp.—Seeb., 224.—H. L.—P. B.

Veronica (Berenice), the name of a legendary woman, who miraculously came into the possession of an image of Christ's face—either of Christ in the full beauty of youth, or of Christ crowned with thorns. According to one version, she is identical with Martha, the sister of Lazarus; according to another, she was the daughter of the Canaanitish woman; according to a third, she was a princess of Edessa. The apocryphal gospel of Nicodemus claims that she is the woman healed by Christ (Matth. IX, 18-26). The Western tradition relates that Christ imparted a picture of his holy face upon a towel presented to Him by her on the Way of the Cross. She brought the towel to Rome, to Emperor Tiberius ("Acts of Pilate"). The name Berenice (Veronion) is old; its derivation from "Vera Icon" (the true picture) is hypothetical. F. 12 July, Mz. The sixteenth century breviaries of Milan contained her feast with a special office, 4 Feb. S. Charles expunged it.—P. B. (12 July)—Dand., V, 137.

Veronica of Binasco (B.), V., O. S. A.; b. at Binasco, near Milan, of poor parents, with whom she worked in the field. She took the Augustinian habit (as a lay sister) at Milan; joining the active to the contemplative life she collected alms in the streets of the city. D. 13 Jan., 1497. Her cult was approved by Leo X. F. 19 (13) Jan., O. S. A.; 3 Feb. dp. at Pavia.—H. L.—F. J.

Veronica Nucci (B.), V., 3rd O. F. M.; b. at Cerreto, 26 Nov., 1841, she took the vows at Ischia, in 1859, and d. 9 Nov., 1862.—H. L.

Although their names are identical with the Syrian Martyrs Victor and Corona, still these two saints may be "local saints, without any connection with the Oriental martyrs." The relics of S. Victor of Otricoli were found by Bishop Fulgentius.—H. L.—O.

Victor and Corona (Stephanis), celebrated Martyrs in Syria. Their unreliable "Passion," which, however, contains genuine parts, relates that Victor was b. in Cilicia and, under Antonius Pius (136–61), was a soldier at Alexandria (or at Coma in Egypt). The Rom. Mart. says that they suffered in Syria. The Greeks assign them to Damascus, most of the Latin sources to Coma in Egypt, others to Otricoli in Umbria or to Sicily. After many attempts had been made to kill Victor by torture, he was beheaded. The young wife of the soldier (16 years), Corona, who had encouraged him to constancy, was tied to two trees (forcibly drawn together and suddenly released) and torn to pieces. Relics of these saints are venerated at Osimo and Montefeltre. In popular superstition, S. Corona (Crown) is invoked in money affairs, as keeper of hidden treasures and patroness of lotteries. F. 14 May, Rom. Mart. They are Pmp. of Belluno, Italy; dp. at Compostella (Spain) and Messina (Sicily). Victor III (B.), Pope, 1086–87, C., O. S. B. His secular name was Desiderius Defaurie of Benevento. He took the Benedictine habit at Mte. Cassino and was elected abbot, in 1057. He was an eminent statesman and rendered incomparable services to the Church; he effected the alliance between Gregory VII and Robert Guiscard. 24 May, 1086, he was elected successor to Gregory VII, but was not consecrated until 9 May, 1087, because he energetically refused to accept the tiara. After his coronation he continued the policy of Gregory, and confirmed the excommunication of Henry IV and his partisans. He did not go to Rome, but continued to reside at Monte Cassino and died there, four months after his consecration, 16 Sept., 1087. Victoria, V., M., a very popular Roman saint. According to her late and unreliable "acts," she was persuaded by the Christian virgin (her sister?) Anatolia to lead a life of strict continency, against the will of her husband (bridegroom?) Eugenius. Reported as a Christian, she was exiled to Tribulana in the Sabine mountains and, three years later, beheaded (at Rome?) in 249. Her "acts" contain ideas about matrimony identical with those developed by the Manichaeans. Her relics are at Rome in S. Adriano. The Anglo-Saxon S. Aldhelm sings the praises of S. Victoria in one of his poems. F. 23 Dec., Rom. Mart. Her feast is found in many calendars of central Italy. She is minor patroness of the dioceses of Acquapendente and Bagnorea. Victoricus, Fuscianus, and Gentianus, Mm. Victorinus and Fuscianus were natives of Rome, sent to preach the Gospel to the Morini (Théroutanne and Boulogne). Gentianus, of Sama near Amiens, was converted by them and received them into his house; for this "crime" he was beheaded, by command of Rictiovarus; the missionaries also, after most cruel torments, were beheaded, about 286. Victorinus, Victor, Ninivita, Nicoforus, Claudianus, Dioscorus, Serapion, Mm., in Egypt; thus the Mart. Hier. on Feb. 24. This rubric represents the heroes of the "Passion" of the Egyptian martyrs Victorinus, Victor, Nicephorus, Claudianus, Dioscorus, Serapion, and Papias. Ninivita does not belong to this group; the name represents Evethius of Nicomedia. On account of the intrusion of "Ninivita" some martyrologists ascribe all these saints to Nicomedia instead of Egypt. (Eg., 51). Perhaps only Serapion belongs to Egypt, Claudianus, Dioscorus, and Papias to Attalia in Pamphylia; Victor, Victorinus, and Nicephorus to Nicomedia. (Eg., 58); v. the next group, showing the confusion into which the stories of some martyrs have been thrown.

Victorinus, Victor the Ninivite, and Nicephorus, according to their untrustworthy "acts," were pounded in a large mortar; Claudius had his legs hacked off; Diodorus was burned alive, Serapion was decapitated and Papias drowned. They suffered under Decius, at Corinth, in 251. Their story may be one of the ancient Christian romances freely invented and attached to some known names. The Roman Mart. claims that they were martyred at Diospolis, Egypt, in 284, under Numerian. The Menology of Maltzew says (27 Apr.) that they suffered at Nicomedia, with Hermelina, Laetissima, etc. F. 25 Feb. Rom. Mart.; 31 Jan., Mz. and 27 Apr.; 5 Apr., MGr.—Comm.—Quent., 200 (26 May).—A. Victorinus, Bp. of Pettau (Petavio) in Styria (Austria), M., the oldest Western exegete. He was born on the confines of the Eastern and Western empires (S. Jerome remarked that he knew Greek better than Latin and called him "one of the pillars of the Church.") However, since he shared the errors of the Millenarians, his works were ranked with the apocrypha on the Gelasian list. D. a martyr under Diocletian. The Roman Martyrology writes "Pictaviensis," instead of "Petaviensis"; consequently Guérin (P. B., XIII, 117) identifies this Victorinus with S. Nectarius and claims that he was the first-bishop of Poitiers in France. —F. 2 Nov., Rom. Mart.; dp. 3 Nov. at Seckau and Lavant.—C. E.—Buch.—H. D.

Victricius, Bp. of Rouen, C.; b. about 330; he entered the military service when seventeen years of age. After his conversion to the true faith, he studied rhetoric, philosophy, and theology. He was elected bishop of Rouen, in 380, when still a layman. He combated paganism, Arianism, and Pelagianism, restored discipline with a firm hand, founded a monastery at Rouen and many churches throughout his bishopric. He obtained many relics for his new cathedral from Milan. He was a friend of S. Martin and S. Paulinus. Accused of Apollinarianism, he went to Rome, in 403, where he met Pope Innocent I and Emperor Honorius. He was the first metropolitan of Rouen. D. about 409. F. 7 Aug., Rom. Mart., dp. at Vincent, of Saragossa, deacon, M., the most illustrious martyr of Spain. B. at Huesca; he was archdeacon of Bishop Valerius of Saragossa. Because the Bishop labored under an impediment of speech, he devoted himself to prayer and contemplation and intrusted the teaching office to S. Vincent. When the imperial edict for the seizure of the clergy was published, in 303, Vincent with his bishop was brought to Valencia, where governor Dacianus then resided. Valerius was condemned to exile, but Vincent, after an eloquent defence, was racked, lacerated, burnt and thrown on pot-sherds. Fantastic legends surround his martyrdom, death and burial. D. 22 Jan., 304, at Valencia, where he was burned. His relics were brought to Saragossa, in 855, to Castres (Gascony) in 864, and, later on, partially to Lisbon. Rome has three churches dedicated to him. His cult is very ancient and his name is found in the oldest martyrologies. The Spanish poet Prudentius has left us a lengthy hymn composed in his honor. F. 22 Jan., Rom. Vincent Ferrer, C., O. P., one of the glories of the Dominican Order. B. at Valencia, Spain, 23 Jan., 1350. He studied at the Dominican cloistral school, then at Barcelona and Lerida. From 1384 to 1391 he was professor at the cathedral school of Valencia; after 1391, adviser of King John I of Aragon and confessor of the queen. In 1395, he was called to Avignon by Pope Benedict XIII, and appointed Grand Penitentiary (in his writings he defended the schism of Avignon), but returned to Valencia, in 1398, full of grief over the condition of the Church. In 1399, he commenced to preach penance in the countries under the obedience of the Avignon Popes. In Spain he converted 25,000 Jews and 8,000 Moors, in Northern Italy and France thousands of Waldenses and Cathari. Accompanied by large crowds of laymen and many priests, he often spoke 3 and 4 times a day. He preached in Catalonia, Provence, Dauphiné, Savoy, Lombardy, Germany, Lorraine, and Flanders. He penetrated as far as England, Scotland, and Ireland. From conviction a partisan of Benedict XIII, he did not hesitate to persuade him to resign when the welfare of the Church demanded it. He won Ferdinand I of Aragon against the schism and himself, at Perpignan (1416), published Ferdinand's disengagement from Benedict XIII. Martin V sent him to Northern France, where he died, at Vannes, Brittany, 5 April, 1418. He had a most extraordinary gift of languages, so that with very little effort, and after no lengthy study, he was able to preach in any European language. He felt that he was sent by God to prepare men for the General Judgment. He was canonized, 29 June, 1455. He is patron of the province of Valencia, of Vannes, and of the island of Stromboli, and minor patron of the cities of Naples, Benevento, Fabriano, Aquila, etc. F. 5 Apr., Rom. Salonus and Veranus, the sons of S. Eucherius of Lyons. D. about 445. In 434, he wrote two Commonitoria, in which he developed the principles of ecclesiastical tradition and the evolution of dogma. He was not free from Semi-Pelagian sympathies and opposed the extreme interpretation of the doctrine of S. Augustine on grace. Vincent, M., Bp. of Bevagna (Mevania, now in the diocese of Spoleto). With his brother, the deacon Benignus, he was tortured at Perugia. Benignus was beheaded, whilst Vincent was permitted to return to Bevagna. Later on, during the persecution of Diocletian, he was again brought to court, and died of his wounds in prison. His "acts" are unreliable. His relics are partly in the cathedral of Benevento, partly in that of Lucca. Vincent, Deacon and M., at Agen, Gascony; he was slain by the pagans, probably because he had disturbed a feast of the Gallic Druids. Era uncertain (292?). His relics were transferred to Conches (Mas d'Agenais), diocese of Rodez. Perhaps he is identical with S. Vincent of Saragossa. F. 9 June, Rom. Mart., at Agen dp. 2 cl.—P. B.—Mg.

Vincent, C. (Madelgar was his civil name before entering the Benedictine Order); b. at Strépy of a noble Frankish (not Scottish) family, husband of S. Waltrud and father of S. Landry, Madelberta, and Aldetrud. He took the habit of S. Benedict under the name of Vincent, at Haumont monastery, which he himself had founded. Later on he went to Soignies monastery, which he had also established and was elected abbot of Soignies. D. 14 July, 677. F. 14 July, dp. at Cambrai and Tournai.—P. B.—Mg.

Vincent de Paul, C., founder of the Lazarists and of the Sisters of Charity, and patron of all works of charity. B. at Pouey (Ranguières), near Dax, Gascony. Having toiled in poverty to finish his classical course, he studied theology at Saragossa and Toulouse, and was ordained priest, 23 Sept., 1600. In 1605, he fell into the hands of Corsairs, who, at Tunis, sold him into slavery, first to a fisherman, then to a chemist; having converted his third master, a renegade, he fled with him to Avignon and Rome (1607). In 1609, at Paris, he was appointed almoner of Queen Margaret de Valois. Upon the advice of his friend and guide, Berulle, he took charge of the parish of Clichy, near Paris (1612). From 1613 to 1617, he was tutor in the house of the Count de Gondi-Joigny. On 25 Jan., 1617, he commenced his work of converting sinners (general confession) at Folleville, diocese of Amiens. In 1617, he was appointed pastor of the neglected parish of Châtillon-les-Dombes, where he organized a system of relief for the poor amongst the well-to-do. In 1619, he became General Almoner of Louis XIII for the royal galleys. As such he directed his solicitude to the convicts in the galleys at Marseilles and Bordeaux, and to other prisoners in the jails of France. To counteract ignorance and indifference, he held numerous missions. He united the priests who assisted him in his work into the Congregation of the Mission (1624), whose members lived in common in the former leper house of S. Lazare. There he gave retreats for all, especially for the candidates for the priesthood; also, on Tuesdays, conferences for priests. From his society of lay men and women for the exercise of Christian charity grew the Congregation of the Sisters of Charity (1633), whose first superioress was the Blessed Louise de Marillac. Through these societies and their houses he organized the care for the poor, sick children, fallen girls, blind, insane, etc. He vigorously, but with kindness to the erring, opposed Jansenism. His simple and frail exterior, his sunny, smiling, humble face, concealed a noble spirit of prudence, courage, and energy, an eminently practical talent for organization, and a heart full of faith and charity. D. at Paris, 27 Sept., 1660. He was buried in S. Lazare. His body was elevated, 19 July, 1712; 25 Apr., 1830, it was brought to the new church of S. Lazare; in 1907, to Liège. He was beatified, 13 Aug., 1723; canonized, 16 June, 1737. F. 19 July, Rom. Mart., in the Latin Church (11 Dec., 1737) 19 July dp.; by C. Virgilius (Feargal), C., Bp. of Salzburg, surnamed "the Geometer." B. in Ireland, about 700. He was abbot of Aghadoe, Kerry. In 743, he came to the court of Pepin the Short, at Quiercy. In 745, he went to

Bavaria, where Duke Odilo made him abbot of S. Peter's and bishop of Salzburg. He was not consecrated, however, before 15 June, 767. He had a controversy with S. Boniface over a defective form of baptism, which was decided in favor of Virgil. He was censured by Pope Zachary because he believed in an underground world with a sun and moon of its own, in elves and gnomes living in the depths of the mountains (not for teaching that the world is round and that we have antipodes). Virgil christianized Carinthia, defended the possessions of his church, and built a magnificent cathedral, which he dedicated to S. Rupert, 24 Sept., 774, having brought there the relics of Ss. Rupert, Chuniald, and Gislar. D. 27 Nov., 789, at Salzburg. His relics were elevated, 27 Febr., 1181. He was canonized, 10 June, 1233. F. 27 Nov., Rom. Vitalis and Agricola, Mm., of Bologna, highly celebrated in the Western Church. Agricola was a member of a noble family of Bologna. After having embraced Christianity, he converted his slave, Vitalis. He was arrested with Vitalis, probably in 304. The servant was martyred before the eyes of his master, who, after the death of Vitalis, was crucified (?), 4 Nov., 304. Both were buried in the Jewish cemetery. S. Ambrose and S. Eusebius discovered their place of sepulture in 393 and deposited the bones in the church of S. Peter. In 1060, they were brought to S. Stephen's. Perhaps the relics of S. Vitalis were transferred to Najera in Spain. F. 4 Nov., Rom. Mart., simpl. in the Latin Church; at Bologna, dp. 2 cl.; in S. Stephen's, dp. 1 cl. oct.; Tr. rel., 3 March. In the countries north of the Alps his feast was kept 27 Nov.—P. B.—L. S.

Vitus (Guy), M., one of the 14 Helpers in Need. He is a historical personage. His cult and feast ("In Lucania Viti") are securely established and very ancient. In the various versions of his "Passion" ("a poor attempt at religious romance"), under the influence of Oriental legends, S. Vitus is pictured as a fantastic hero. According to this account he was b. in Sicily (Mazzara). His instructor, Modestus, and his nurse, Crescentia, fled with him to Lucania (Italy). Brought to Rome, Vitus delivered the Emperor Diocletian's daughter of an evil spirit, but nevertheless was subjected to the most atrocious torments and thrown into a caldron filled with pitch and molten lead. He emerged uninjured from all these tortures. At last, with Modestus and Crescentia, he was transferred by an angel from Rome back to Lucania, where they soon afterwards died of their wounds. His relics are said to have been brought to S. Denis, under abbot Fulrad (d. 784). Abbot Hilduin donated part of them to Abbot Warin of Corvey in Westphalia (Tr. rel., 10 March.) In 1355, Emperor Charles IV transferred the rest of the body from S. Denis to Prague. S. Vitus is patron against epilepsy and the nervous disorder called S. Vitus' Dance. B. G. thinks that there were two saints of the name of Vitus, one of whom suffered in Sicily, the other at Rome. Modestus and Crescentia may have no relation to Vitus. F. 15 June (not ancient), Rom. Wedegund = B. Radegund, O. Praem., 29 Jan.

Wenceslas (Vaclav), Duke of Bohemia, M. Under the influence of his grandmother he was piously educated, perhaps for a clerical career. After the early death (926) of his father, Duke Wratislav, who politically inclined towards Germany, under the leadership of Drahomira, the daughter of a pagan prince of the Slav Liuticians, and wife of Wratislav, a reaction set in against the Germans and against Christianity. The German missionaries were driven away, Ludmilla was strangled, the churches were neglected and support was given to the pagan Wends against Germany. Upon the approach of a German army, Wenceslas took the regency out of his mother's hands (928), made peace with Emperor Henry I, recalled the German priests, and tried to raise the moral, religious, and cultural standard of the Bohemians. He did not lack courage and energy, but allowed himself to be led too exclusively by his kindness of heart. The Bohemian nobles did not sympathize with his policy and he was killed by his turbulent brother, Boleslav, at the portal of the church of Alt-Bunzlau, 28 Sept., 935. His body was brought to the cathedral of S. Vitus (938); his sepulchre was opened in 1911. F. 28 Sept., Rom., Mart.; in the Latin Church, sem.; dp. maj. in Poland; dp. 1 cl. oct. Wendelin (Saints), several strangers in the habit of pilgrims, who are venerated at Meckenheim, near Bonn. F. 19 Oct.—H. L.

Wendelin, C. All that is known of him, is that he was a pious shepherd and that miracles were wrought over his body, which reposes at S. Wendel on the Nahe in Western Germany. The legend of Treves claims that he was b. in Ireland, about 554, as the son of a Scottish king, who sent him away because he was too fond of reading the Psalter. On his pilgrimage he came to the valley of the Blies, where he lived for many years as a hermit and did shepherd's service on a neighboring farm. At the end of the 6th century the anchorites of Tholey elected him as their abbot. His body was buried in his wooden cell, which was later replaced by a chapel. The pilgrimages to his shrine gave origin to the town of S. Wendel, diocese of Treves. He is the patron of swineherds, shepherds, and peasants, one of the most popular saints of the South of Germany. F. 20 Oct. dp. at Freiburg and Rottenburg. dp. at Treves 23 Oct. Tr. rel. 5 July.—D. G., II, 306.—H. L.

Werin = S. Gerin.

Werinhard, M., at Ebstorp; v. S. Wigmann, 2 Feb.

Werner, a boy martyr, "the last Rhenish Martyr." B. about 1273, at Wammenrat, near Simmern, on the Rhine. Being a poor orphan, he took service in a Jew's house at Oberwesel. Having received Communion on Holy Thursday, 19 Apr., 1287, he was martyred by fanatical Jews, who wanted to possess themselves of the Sacred Host. They opened his veins and bled him to death. The body was brought up the Rhine (by boat) and thrown into a pit at Bacherach, where it was discovered by the guards of the castle; after the murderers had been found, the body was buried at S. Cunibert's, Bacherach. In 1428, a magnificent church was built in his honor; in 1601, it was destroyed and the Saint's relics were lost. F. 18 Apr. sem. at Limburg, dp. at Treves.—H. L.—H. D.

Widukind (Wittekind) (B.), duke of Saxony, C. Born at Enger in Westphalia; he resided at Minden and Wildhausen (Oldenburg). A bitter enemy of the Franks and the Christian faith, he waged a bloody war against Charlemagne, from 772-83. He was, at last, defeated, converted, and baptized at Attigny (Ardennes), in 785. With S. Hercumbert, bishop of Minden, he zealously endeavored to convert his people and erected churches over the pagan sacrificial altars. He fell in a battle against the Suabians, 7 Jan. 807. His body is in the church at Enger, where he enjoyed a popular cult before the Reformation. F. 7 Jan.—Kr., 68.—Str. G., 21.

Wifred, C., O. S. B., provost, later abbot of S. Victor at Marseilles, 1005-21. F. 13 Dec.—P. B.

Wigbert, C., an Englishman and disciple of S. Egbert at Rathmelsig, Ireland. He preached the Gospel for two years in Frisia before the time of S. Willibrord, but returned to Ireland. D. about 690. F. 12 Apr.—Bat., 65.—St.

Wigbert, abbot, O. S. B., of Fritzlar. He was a native of England, became a monk, probably at Nutselle near Winchester, and followed the call of S. Boniface to Germany. S. Boniface appointed him superior of the school and monastery of Fritzlar; he reorganized Ohrdruf monastery, but returned to Fritzlar before his death. (Seven companions of S. Boniface in the mission field bore the name "Wigbert"). D. 13 Aug., about 735. F. 13 Aug., Rom. Mart.; at Fritzlar dp. 1 cl. oct.; Tr. rel. 15 May sem. at Mayence; Fulda dp. 18 Aug.—H. L.—H. D.

Wigmann, Bardo (three), Theuderic (two), Gerrie, Liutolph, Folkward, Avan and Liuthar, Saxon counts; Aderam, Alfwin, Addasta, Aida (two), Dudo, Bodo, Wala, Halif, Humildium, Adelwin, Werinhard, Hilward, and companions, Mm., under the leadership of Duke Bruno and Bishop Theuderic of Minden fell in battle against the Norsemen at Ebstorf (Ebbekesdorp), on the heath of Lüneburg, Germany, 2 Feb., 880. Their story has been embellished by folklore. The legend claims that Pope Benedict V had come with many cardinals to help the Saxons and fell with them in battle. On the battlefield a monastery was erected, perhaps a hundred years later, when the relics of these martyrs were found. In the monastic church at Ebstorp these saints were venerated up to the Reformation; v. S. Bruno and S. Theudoric.—H. L.

Wiho = S. Wicterp, 18 Apr.

Wiho, C., first Bp. of Osnabrück, Germany. B. in Frisia and educated by S. Gregory at Utrecht; he was preconized bishop of Osnabrück by Charlemagne. He built a church there in honor of S. Peter. D. 1 Apr., 804. F. 20 Apr. dp. at Osnabrück.—H. L.—Kr., 94.—H. D.

Wilfetrud (Wolftrud), V.; b. about 639;

she was second abbess of Nivelles in Brabant, in 659; she was a niece of S. Gertrude. D. in 670. F. 23 Nov.—P. B.

Wilfrid, Archbp. of York, C., one of the greatest men of his age, who, with singular force of character, guided the English Church through one of its most dangerous crises, the struggle between Rome and Iona. B. at Ripon, in 634, as the son of a Northumbrian thane, he was educated first at the court of King Oswy, then at Lindisfarne and Canterbury. He left the court of King Oswy a second time and went to Rome with S. Benedict Biscop. There he decided to spend his life in suppressing the Celtic usages in the Church of England and welding it firmly to Rome. After his return (658) he was elected abbot of Ripon. He abolished the rule of Iona in several dependent monasteries, and introduced the rule of S. Benedict. In 663, he was ordained to the priesthood. After the conference of Whitby (664), in which, through his exertions, the Celtic Easter compute was officially abrogated, he was elected archbishop of York. The disappointed Columbite monks withdrew to the North. Wilfrid was consecrated (664) at Compiègne in France, but as he tarried too long in France, he found his see occupied upon his return (667) by a Scottish adversary, S. Chad, and could not take possession before the new metropolitan, S. Theodore, arrived at Canterbury, in 669. A new conflict developed when S. Theodore and King Egfrid divided Northumbria into three bishoprics. Wilfrid resisted and went to Rome to appeal to the Apostolic See. This is the first known instance of an appeal to Rome by an English prelate. He obtained a favorable decision from Pope Agatho (679), but on his return was imprisoned by his old adversary, King Egfrid (680-81), and exiled. Wilfrid evangelized Sussex and founded Selsea monastery on an estate given to him by King Ethelwulf. He also preached successfully in Wessex and converted King Ceadwalla. In 686, he was reconciled to the aged Theodore and recalled to York by King Aldfrid. Exiled again, mostly because he would not give up Ripon (691), he fled to Mercia, and, after the stormy synod of Austerfield Plain, went to Rome a third time (703). Justified by John XVI, he returned to England (706) after some hesitation and a grievous illness (at Meaux). After the synod on Nidd river, Hexham and Ripon were restored to him. Broken in health, he died at Oundle, Northamptonshire, 24 Apr., 709. His relics were brought from Ripon to Canterbury by S. Odo, 12 Oct., 940, and restored to Ripon in 1226. F. 12 Oct., Rom. Mart.; dp. over all England; Tr. rel., at York 24 Apr.; at Ripon F. of his nativity Sunday after 1 Aug.—St.—L. S.—Angl.—Hamp.—P. B.

Wilfrid, the Younger, Bp., C. He was educated at Whitby abbey, under S. Hilda, and attached himself to S. John of Beverley. In 718, he was elected archbishop of York, succeeding S. John of Beverley, but resigned and retired to Ripon. He d. in 744. His relics are at Worcester (?). F. 29 Apr. at Sarum.—St.

Wilhelm = S. William.

Willebald (Willibald, Vulband, Vibald, Villebaud), M., patron of the parish of Saint-Vulbas, in the diocese of Belley, France. He was governor of Burgundia Transjurana under Dagobert and Clovis II. Floacat, the Master of the Palace of Clovis II, whose election he had opposed, slew him, in 660. His relics are at Saint-Villebaud. F. 10 May simpl. at Belley.—P. B.—Mg.

Willebold of Berkheim (B.), C. He was a scion of the noble house of Calw in Suabia. In 1229, under the name of Willebold, he undertook a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, in voluntary poverty. On the way home, consumed by fatigue and privations, he died in the hayloft of the Crown Inn, at Berkheim (valley of the Iller), Würtemberg, 1 Nov., 1230. His cult was sanctioned by the bishop of Constance, in 1705. He is minor patron of Berkheim. F. 2 Nov.—H. L.—H. I.

Willebrand, M., alleged Italian duke and companion of S. Ursula, V., M. F. 18 June.—A. S.

Willehad of Denmark, M., O. F. M.; b. in 1492, in Denmark; he took the Franciscan habit when the country was still Catholic. Upon the introduction of Lutheranism he was exiled and received by his brethren at Gorkum, Holland. Ninety years old, he was hanged with 18 companions, by the Calvinists at Briel, 9 July, 1572; v. S. Nicholas Piek. F. 9 July.

Willehad, first (regionary) Bp. of Bremen, Germany. B. before 745, in Northumberland (England) and probably educated at York under Egbert. He came to Frisia in 765, and, with varying success, preached the Gospel in the territory of Dockum, until he was driven away by the irate pagans. In 780, Charlemagne called him to preach and organize the Church in the pagan province of Wigmodia, about the Lower Weser. In 782, during the Saxon revolt, he fled to Frisia, went to Rome with S. Ludger, and then retired for two years to Echternach. After Widukind's baptism he resumed his mission work on the Lower Weser and was consecrated bishop at Worms, 13 July, 787. He resided at Bremen and died, one week after the dedication of his Cathedral, 8 Nov., 789, at Blexen on the Weser. F. 8 Nov., Rom. Mart. Before the Reformation his feast was kept at Bremen-Hamburg, 8 Nov., with an octave; also in Denmark, Sweden, and Norway. At Bremen, 13 July, F. of his Ordination. Nov 16 Oct. in Hildesheim, Osnabrück and in the Northern Missions.—Bat., 437.—H. L.—H. D.

Willeic, abbot of Kaiserwerth, a friend of S. Suitbert; d. in 726. F. 2 March.—H. L.

Willeric, 2nd Bp. of Bremen; he evangelized the Wichmodesgau (Wigmodia) after the death of S. Willehad. Driven away by the pagan Saxons, in 791, he returned, in 804, and was consecrated bishop of Bremen (Willehad had been regency bishop). He built a stone cathedral and a chapel over the relics of S. Willehad. D. 4 May, 837.—H. L.

William (Guillaume) of Donjeon, Archbp. of Bourges, C. Born about 1149, in Arthel castle, of the Counts of Nevers. He was canon at Soissons and Paris, took the habit at Grandmont, passed over to the Cistercians at Pontigny, in 1167, was elected abbot of Fontaine-Jean (diocese of Sens) and, in 1187, of Châlis near Senlis. In 1200, he was chosen archbishop of Bourges. Zealous in abolishing abuses and in fighting the heresy of the Albigenses, he was also a courageous defender of ecclesiastical immunity against King Philip August. D. 10 Jan., 1209. Canonized, 17 May, 1218. F., formerly O. Cist. 10 Jan., now 6 Feb. dp.; at Bourges, 19 Jan. dp. maj.—P. B.—Mg.

William, "the Great," or of Malavalle, C., founder of the (long extinct) Congregation of Hermits called "Williamites." Nothing is known of his early life. From a visit to Rome and a pilgrimage of penance to Jerusalem he returned in 1153, and commenced to lead a hermit's life on Mte. Pruno, near Pisa. In 1155, he retired to a deserted valley near Siena, called "Malavalle" (Stabulum Rhodis), with one disciple (Albert). D. 10 Feb., 1157, at Malavalle. Albert, a physician, Renaldo, continued his rule of life, and their hermitage became the center of the austere Order of Guillelmites (Williamites), which was later on united partly with the Augustinian Hermits, partly with the Benedictines. Cult approved in 1202. F. 10 Febr. dp. at Pisa, Siena, Grosseto, and O. S. A. He is often confounded with S. William of Gellone and others.—Ord., II, 180.—P. B.—H. L.

William, "the Child," one of the boy martyrs of the Middle Ages. He was apprentice to a tanner at Norwich England, and is said to have been crucified by Jews, in derision of Christ's Passion, in 1139. The cause and manner of his death are not sufficiently established. His body was buried at Thorpe Wood and brought to Norwich Cathedral, 22 March, 1144. F. at Norwich, 26 (from 25) March. He is the first victim of the alleged Jewish "Ritual Murders"; v. C. E., XV, 635.—St.

William III, Tempier, C., Bp. of Poitiers. B. at Poitiers; he had been Canon Regular at Saint-Hilaire-de-la-Celle, Poitiers, and strenuously opposed simony in spite of calumny and persecution; d. 29 March, 1197. F. 27 March, dp. at Poitiers.—P. B.—Mg.

William, C.; b. at Eygliers, diocese of Embrun; he was shepherd to the monks of N. D. de Calme, received the Benedictine habit at Oulx, and studied at Avignon. Elected abbot, he rebuilt the abbey of Calme, which had been destroyed by the high waters of the Durance. He lived in the 12th century. Through the relic of his hand at Eygliers many miracles were wrought. F. 31 March.—P. B.

William, C., canon and provost at Neufchâtel, in 1196. D. about 1232. F. 29 March.—Chev.

William, C., abbot of Aiguebelle, diocese of Verdun, France. When this abbey, restored after 1137, was offered to the Cistercians, Otho, abbot of Morimond, sent S. William there as first Cistercian abbot. D. in 1160. F. 31 March.—P. B., IV, 75.

William (Guglielmo) Gnoffi, of Polizzi, hermit, C.; b. at Polizzi, near Palermo, of poor parents, he led a most austere life in various places near Polizzi, to atone for a sin he had committed. He built several chapels and hermitages. F. 16 Apr., at Castelbuono (princ. patron), dp. 1 oct.—Off. pr.—Auss.

William of Paris, or of Eskill, or of Roeskilde, abbot in Denmark. B. at S. Germain, near Crépy, in 1125, educated at Paris; he was appointed canon at the church of S. Geneviève, Paris, and provost at Epinay. When Eugene III, in 1147, introduced the Canons Regular at S. Geneviève, William at once joined the institute. He was sent to Roeskilde, Denmark, to reform a colony of Canons Regular at Eskilsoe (Ise Fjord), in 1171. He also founded the monastery of S. Thomas, Zealand. After having been elected superior, he died, 6 Apr., 1202. Canonized, 12 Feb., 1224; Tr. rel. to Ebelholt in 1238. F. 6 Apr., Rom. Mart.; formerly all over Denmark, 16 June; at Roeskilde, Tr. of his arm, 30 Nov. simpl.—H. L.—P. B.—Comm.

William, "the Infant," murdered by Jews

at Paris, on Good Friday, 1177. F. 21 Apr.—P. B.

William Firmatus, hermit. B. at Tours, he was a canon practicing medicine at S. Venance; leaving all he had, he retired to the solitude of Mantilly, diocese of LeMans. After a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, he continued his eremitical life at Savigny and Mantilly, and d. at Mantilly, 24 Apr., 1103. His body is in the church of S. Evrould, Mortain. F. at Coûtances, 29 Apr., sem.; at Laval, 24 Apr.; at Tours, 28 Feb. dp.; Tr. rel., 31 July.—P. B.—Mg.

William and Peregrinus, Cc., princ. patrons of Foggia in Apulia. William was the son of a French official at Antioch (after 1100). His son Peregrinus made a pilgrimage from Antioch to Jerusalem and remained there to serve the sick. Among these he found his father, William, who had come to search for his son. Both returned to Italy and led an eremitical life near Foggia. D. towards the end of 12th century. Their relics were elevated in 1630. F. at Foggia 26 Apr. dp. 1 cl. oct. (princ. patr.).—Off. pr. Fod.—H. L.

William (Guillemen, Anthilmen), C. He was an English priest in care of souls at Pontoise. He was highly esteemed by King Philip August, in whose palace at Pontoise he died, in 1193. F. at Pontoise, 10 May; 11 May dp. at Versailles.—P. B.—Mg.

William, M. He was a native of Perth in Scotland and a baker by trade. On a pilgrimage to Rome he was killed by his servant Cockerman (a foundling whom he had reared), near Rochester. Since miracles occurred at his tomb, his bones were brought to the cathedral of Rochester. Period unknown (12 century?). F. 23 May, Angl. Mart. (Finding of his body.)—St.

William, duke of Gascony and founder of Gellone monastery, O. S. B. He was one of the most intimate courtiers and friends of Charlemagne, duke of Toulouse and Gascony, who distinguished himself in war against the Moors in Spain (801). He is the central figure of an old French heroic legend (William of Orange). In 806, he left his family, took the habit at Gellone (Saint-Guilhem-le-Desert), near Montpellier, founded by him, in 804, and spent the rest of his days as a lay brother. D. at Gellone, 28 May, 912. Canonized by Alexander II, in 1066. F. 28 May dp. maj. at Montpellier, dp. at Toulouse.—P. B.—Mg.

William Fitzherbert (Thwayt), C., archbp. of York. He was a nephew of King Stephen and, about 1130, became canon and treasurer of York. In 1142, at the instance of the King, he was elected archbishop of York in opposition to the candidature of Henry Mur-dac, a Cistercian monk. The validity of the election was disputed on the ground of simony and undue royal influence, and Archbishop Theobald of Canterbury refused to consecrate William, pending an appeal to Rome. S. Bernard exercised his influence in favor of Murdac, but, in 1143, Celestine II decided that William should be consecrated. William having proved his innocence, the papal legate consecrated him at Winchester, 26 Sept., 1143. Whilst he was in Rome to obtain the pallium, in 1147, his partisans burnt the Cistercian abbey of Fountains, of which Murdac was prior, whereupon Eugene III suspended and deposed him and consecrated Murdac. William devoted himself to prayer and mortification at Winchester. After the death of the Pope and S. Bernard, he appealed to the new Pope, Anastasius IV, for restoration to his see. Since Murdac died the same year, William was confirmed and, having received the pallium, returned to York. His death, so sudden as to cause suspicion of poison, took place a few weeks later, 8 June, 1154. Because miracles took place at his tomb, he was canonized, 18 March, 1226. Tr. rel. 9 Jan., 1283. F. 8 June, Rom. Mart., in all England and by the English Benedictines. Tr. rel. at York (before the Reformation), 9 Jan.—L. S.—St.—Angl.—Hamp.—P. B.

William, a hermit on the isle of Farne, England. The brethren in Durham monastery, where he spent several years, gave him the name of Bartholomew. Desirous of leading a more austere life, he retired to Farne. He possessed the gift of prophecy. D. in 1182. F. 24 June; v. S. Bartholomew of Farne.

William of Vercelli, abbot and founder of the Williamites or Hermits of Monte Vergine, O. S. B. B. of noble parents at Vercelli, in 1085; having been left an orphan, he gave up his inheritance, at the age of 14, made a pilgrimage to Compostella, and retired to a mountain near Avellino, called Montevergigliano. He gathered disciples, built a church in honor of the Bl. Virgin, and called the mountain "Monte Vergine." In 1128, he founded a new establishment on the Serra Cognata, still another at Conza, and a double monastery at Guglieto, near Nusco, which formed the basis for his Congregation of Benedictine hermits. When his brethren complained against his austerities, he followed a call to the court of King Roger II of Sicily and Naples. D. in Guglieto monastery, 25 June, 1142. The Order was approved 4 Nov., 1197. Now only the motherhouse at Montevergine remains. His relics were brought from Guglieto to Mte. Vergine in 1807. Montevergine is still a greatly frequented place of pilgrimage on account of a miraculous picture of Our Lady of Constantinople, brought there from the East in the 14th century. (F. 1 Sept.) F. 25 June, Rom. Mart., dp. in the Latin Church (since 24 Aug., 1785); dp. 1 cl. oct. at Monte Vergine; Tr. rel., 2 Sept. dm.—Ord., I, 264.—P. B.—H. L.—Rams.

William, abbot of Breteuil, diocese of Beauvais, where he took the Benedictine habit. D. in 1130. F. 14 July, simpl., at Beauvais.—P. B.

William Pinchon, Bp., C.; b. at S. Alban, diocese of Saint-Brieuc, the scion of an illustrious Breton family; after his ordination he was appointed canon of S. Gatien, Tours, and, in 1220, bishop of Saint-Brieuc. He energetically maintained the rights of his church against Pierre Mauclerc. Exiled by the Duke, he retired to Poitiers, where he acted as auxiliary; in 1230, he returned to his diocese and reformed the clergy and people by wise laws. He d. 29 July, 1234. Canonized by Innocent III, in 1247. He is secondary patron of the diocese, 29 July, dp. 2 cl. (Rom. Mart.); F. of his Canonization, 15 Apr. dp. 2 cl.—P. B.—Rams.—Mg.

William, C., Bp. of Roskilde. He was a native of England, who came to Denmark with King Knud and remained there to preach the Gospel. In 1044, he was consecrated bishop of Roskilde on the isle of Sealand. He was an intimate friend of King Swend Estrithson. He died shortly after him and was buried at the same time with him in the cathedral of Roskilde, in 1076. His name is found in Danish calendars, 2 Sept., but his F. has never been celebrated liturgically in Denmark.—L. S.—H. L.

William and Achery, Cc., noblemen who led an ascetical life in the solitude of the Vosges mountains, where, later on, arose the monastery of S. Achery, diocese of Strasbourg. They lived in the 9th century. After the death of S. William, S. Achery governed the little community founded by them. F. 3 Nov.—P. B.—Mg.

William Longsword, duke of Normandy, M. He was the son of Duke Rollo and succeeded his father, in 931. His life was not that of a saint ("his piety sincere, his morals not irreproachable"). About to take the habit at Jumièges, he was murdered by some men of the court of Flanders on an isle of the River Somme, 17 Dec., 943. F. in the ancient Breviary of Rouen, 17 Dec. simpl.—L. S.

William of S. Benigne (B.), at Dijon, abbot, O. S. B. He was a son of Count Robert of Volpiano; b. in 962, in a castle on S. Giuglio island, near Novara (Lombardy); his godfather was Emperor Otto I. He took the Benedictine habit at Locedio, near Vercelli. In 987, he passed over to Cluny and,

7 Feb., 990, with 12 monks from Cluny, established S. Benigne, Dijon. His school and monastery became the centre of 40 reformed houses in Burgundy, Lorraine and Italy. He fearlessly opposed Emperor Henry II and King Robert of France, nay, even the Pope, when his sense of justice was offended. D. 1 Jan., 1031, at Fécamp in Normandy.—P. B.—Mg.

William (B. John William), hermit, priest, and founder of N. D. d'Olivet in Belgium. B. about 1174 in Brabant; a journeyman baker, he spent his youth in recklessness and sin. After his conversion, he went to Chermilles abbey, near Vervins. He returned to the world, but again called by God, retired to the solitude of Morlanwel, where he did severe penance. He walked on hands and feet to show that he had lowered himself by sin to the level of a beast. He cleared the forest and founded the monastery of N. D. d'Olivet (Hainaut) for Benedictine nuns. D. in 1240. F. 10 Feb.—P. B.—Mg.

Willibald, M. F. 10 May dp. at Belley.—Off. pr.; v. S. Willibald, 10 May.

Willibald, Bp., C., Apostle of Bavaria, a son of S. Richard; b. in Devon, England, about 700. He was a kinsman of S. Boniface, educated at Waltham, Essex. In 718, he undertook a pilgrimage to Rome with his father, his brother Wunibald, and some friends, but S. Richard died on the way at Lucca. Willibald left Rome and travelled to the Holy Land, over Salerno, Catania, Samos, Cyprus and Darnaseus, in 721. In the spring of 725 he arrived at Constantinople, where he remained two years. In 728, he took the habit of S. Benedict at Mte. Cassino and, ten years later, returned to Rome. In 739, S. Gregory III sent him to Germany as Apostolic missionary. S. Boniface ordained him priest at Eichstätt (Franconia, not Saxonia) and, on 21 Oct., 741, consecrated him regionary bishop. The centre of his activity was at Eichstätt. He was also abbot of the monastery at Eichstätt, which was raised to the dignity of an episcopal see, in 745. In 752, with S. Wunibald, he founded the double monastery of Heidenheim, over which they placed their sister Walburga. 24 Sept., 777, he elevated the body of S. Wunibald. D. 7 July, 781. His body is in the west choir of the Eichstätt Cathedral. F. 7 July, Rom. Mart., dp. in England, and Bavaria, at Fulda, and O. S. B.; at Eichstätt, dp. 1 cl. oct. Willibrand, duke, M.; v. S. Raynald, 18 June.

Willibrord, C. Bp. of Utrecht and Apostle of Frisia. B. of an Anglo-Saxon family in Northumbria, in 658, and educated at Ripon monastery. O. S. B., under the guidance of S. Wilfrid. In 678, he entered Rathmelsigi monastery in Ireland, where he lived for 12 years under S. Egbert, and was ordained to the priesthood. With 12 other missionaries he was sent to Frisia by S. Egbert, in 690; he successfully preached in Western Frisia, which had just been conquered by Pepin of Heristal. He went to Rome to obtain relics and the papal mission from Pope Sergius. After his return, the missionaries elected S. Suitbert as their bishop, but Pepin did not approve of the election and sent Willibrord to Rome, where he was consecrated, 21 Nov., 695, under the name of Clement. From now on he resided at Utrecht, Holland. In 698, he founded Echternach monastery, extended his mission work all over Frisia and Denmark, and to Heligoland. Driven from Utrecht by Radbod (714–19), he offered his services to S. Boniface. He d. at Echternach, 7 Nov., 739. His relics were elevated, 19 Oct., 1031. A peculiar "Dance" is executed by a procession of pilgrims on his feast day at Echternach. He is patron of the ecclesiastical province of Utrecht. F. 7 Nov., Rom. Mart. In Harlem and Utrecht, Holland, dp. 1 cl. oct.; formerly Tr. rel. 19 Oct.; F. of his ordination, 22 Nov.—Gel.—Bat., 70.—W.W.—Buch.—H. D.—P. B.

Willigis, Archbp. of Mayence, Germany, 975–1011, the most eminent statesman of his time. Born of humble parents, at Schöningen, Brunswick, he came to the court of Otto I, who nominated him Chancellor of Germany. In 971. In 975, Otto II made him archbishop of Mayence and archchancellor of the Empire. As such he developed an untiring activity. He was a strong partisan of Otto III and succeeded in having Henry II elected, whom he crowned at Mayence. In 976, Benedict VII appointed him Apostolic vicar for Germany. He energetically defended the Roman primacy against Gerbert (991–98). He built many churches, including a new cathedral (which was destroyed by fire on the day of its dedication, 29 Aug., 1009); erected the collegiate churches of Ss. Stephen and Victor and personally gave instructions in the cathedral school. A source of great annoyance and scandal, however, was his quarrel with S. Bernward over the jurisdiction at Gandersheim, occasioned by the wily nun Sophia, a sister of Otto III. F. 23 Feb. dp. at Mayence, Treves, Fulda, and Limburg. His relics are in S. Stephen's church at Mayence.—H. L.—H. D.

Winfrid = S. Boniface, 5 June.

Winifred (Guinevra, Gwenfrewi, Wenefrid), V., M. A late tradition asserts that she was born at Holywell, Wales. Her father, Thevit, was a Cambrian soldier, her mother, Gwen, a sister of S. Beuno, who educated her. She suffered martyrdom in defence of her chastity, being beheaded by Caradoc, a son of chief Alen. A spring of water gushed forth on the spot where her head fell. S. Beuno raised her to life, and no sign of the severance of the head appeared, except a thin white circle around her neck. After the death of S. Beuno she retired to Gwytherin (S. Elwy), where she was elected abbess of a community of nuns. D. about 650. F. 3 Nov., instituted for England in 1391. Her "Passion" was formerly celebrated in Wales, 22 June. Her legend is quite unreliable. Some think that her martyrdom took place at Gwytherin and that it ended her life. In 1138, her relics were transferred to Shrewsbury, and her Welsh name "Gwenfrewi" was anglicized into "Winifred." Holywell is to-day a celebrated place of pilgrimage, where many miracles are wrought through the water of the Holy Fountain. F. 3 Nov. dp. in England and Wales.—B. G., IV, 352.—St.

Winin (Finan), a priest in Cantire, Scotland. F. 28 May.—O'H., V, 588.

Winnoc, abbot of Wormhoulth. He was of Breton (or British) origin, a kinsman of King S. Judicael, and was educated at Sithiu abbey (Saint-Omer). To rid himself of all worldly impediments, he crossed over to Cornwall, but returned and led a solitary life at what is now Bergue-Saint-Winnoc, near Sithiu. Later he was sent to found the religious community of Wormhoulth. D. 6 Nov., 717. His relics are at Bergue. They were elevated, 18 Sept., 1030. F. at Bergue: 6 Nov. dp. 1 cl. oct.; 20 Feb., Exaltation of his relics and 18 Sept., Tr. rel.—P. B.—Mg.

Winnow (Goesnovius), abbot, C., a disciple of S. Badarn (Paternus). He attached himself to S. Sampson in Cornwall. His church is at Golant on the Fowey. Probably he accompanied S. Sampson to Brittany. F. 25 Oct.—B. G., IV, 352.

Winthir, C., a legendary saint of the 8th century, of whom little is known. According to a legend, he was a mule driver, a native of England, who, upon his return from a pilgrimage, settled at Neuhausen on the Lower Isar River. He is patron of Munich-Neuhausen, where his body is in the church of S. Nicholas. He is patron against diseases of cattle. F. 29 Dec.—H. L.—H. D.

Winwaloe (Wynwallow, Guengaloews, Valois, Gwenno, Wonnow), abbot, a son of the British chieftain Fragan, and of S. Gwent, who had retired to Armorica (Brittany) when the Picts and Saxons invaded Britain. B. at Plou-Fragan, Brittanv, about 457 (his brothers S. Jacut and Guetenoc were born in Wales); educated by S. Budoc. About 480 he left Budoc and established a community at Lesguen; in 484, one on Tibidi island: in 487, he founded the great monastery of Landevennec, the very severe rule of which, in 818, was supplanted by the Benedictine rule. He recited the entire psalter every day. At the age of 23 years he abjured the use of meat. D. 3 March, 532. F. 3 March: Tr. rel. (504) 28 Apr.—B. G., IV, 353.—Moran, 41.—A. B., 7, 167.

Wipert Bluecher (B.), O. Praem., 16th Bp. of Ratzeburg, in the Northwest of Germany. B. in 1326; he was elected bishop in 1356, and died, 15 Sept., 1267. F. 23 May.—Men. Praem.—H. L.

Wiroto (B.), abbot of Vormbach, Germany, 1108-27. He was a severe ascete and miracle worker. D. 29 Oct., 1127. F. 10 March at Gottweih Abbey.—H. L.

Wiro, Bp., C. He was an Englishman, who was won for the mission on the Continent by S. Willibrord. With Ss. Plechelm and Otger he made a pilgrimage to Rome, where Wiro and Plechelm were consecrated regional bishops. Wiro was confessor to Pepin of Heristal, who gave him Mt. S. Peter on the Roer River, to found a monastery. He was the apostle of the Lower Meuse countries, in the 7th century. Most writers claim that S. Wiro belonged to an ancient Irish family of Corbaskin, Clare. His body was brought to Roermund, in 1341. F. 8 May. Rom. Mart., dp. 10 May in Holland; 30 May at Ruremond: Finding of the bones of Wiro, Plechelm, and Otger, dp. 2 cl.—Bat., 409.—P. B.—H. L.

Wladimir (John), king of Dalmatia, M., a son of King Pretislav. He married Kosara, a daughter of King Samuel of Bulgaria, and was imprisoned and beheaded by the Bogumile King Ladislav of Bulgaria, 22 May, 1015. His relics are at Kraina, near Antivari. Many miracles were wrought at his tomb. F. in Servia, Montenegro and Russia, 22 May.—Mrt.—Mz.

Wladimir, "the Great," also called "equal to the Apostles," the first Russian ruler to embrace Christianity. He was the fifth Russian Knjas (prince) of Rurik's house, son of Swjatoslav, grandson of S. Olga, duke of Kiev. A man of great versatility, a heroic warrior and a wise ruler, he extended his realm, broke the power of the Warag (Scandinavian) invaders, and succeeded in uniting the entire nation under one scepter, wherefore he is called the first "autocrat" of Russia. Originally a zealous pagan, he was baptized at Cherson, in 989 (Christian name "Basilus"). At the same time he married S. Ann, a sister of the Greek Emperor Basil II and of Empress Theophanu. At Kiev, he scourged the image of Perun (Slav God of Thunder) and had it thrown into the Dnieper, called priests from Constantinople, and urged his subjects to become Christians, preparing a great baptismal ceremony in the Dnieper. To remain a pagan was prohibited under severe penalties. In 996, he erected the famous Tithe church (Desiatinny Sobor) in honor of the Bl. Virgin and the church of the Transfiguration, both at Kiev, and founded a school, the first in Russia. By nature cruel, passionate, and dissolute, he thoroughly reformed after baptism and gave up his warlike career. But he suffered much annoyance and grief from his twelve unruly, half-pagan sons. He died on the way to Novgorod, 15 July, 1014. His incorrupt body was found in the Tithe Church, in 1636. F. 15 July, solemn office in all Russia, by Catholics (not by the Latins) and schismatics.—Mrt.—Mz.

Martin's tomb, he became a monk at Saint-Yrieix, near Limoges, and preached the Gospel in the Ardennes. Then he led a hermit's life at Carignan, near Sedan, where he extirpated the remnants of the cult of Diana. He tried the discipline and manner of living of the Oriental stylites, but the neighboring Frankish bishops commanded him to descend from his pillar. D. 21 Oct., about 594, near Carignan (Ivois). His monastery disappeared in the tenth century. F. 21 Oct. dp. at Verdun and Reims. Tr. rel. 7 July (780).—H. L.—H. D.

Wulfram (Wulframnus), Bp., C. Born at Milly, Gâtinais, near Fontainebleau. He was a member of the Merovingian court clergy. Under Thierry III (683) he was elected bishop of Sens, but left the diocese (685), retired to Fontenelle, and, in 700, set out to preach the Gospel in Frisia. After 20 years' labor he returned to Fontenelle monastery, where he d., 20 March, about 720. His relics were brought to Blandigny near Ghent, in 858, to Abbéville, in 1058. F. 20 March, dp. at Sens and Utrecht.—P. B.—Mg.

Wulfsi (Wulsi), a hermit, friend of S. Wulstan, who for 40 years lived in the most rigorous seclusion, first at Croyland with the clerics of S. Pega, then at Evesham; 11th century. F. 20 Jan.—St.

Wulfstan = S. Wulstan.

Wulmar (Ulmer), abbot of Samer in France. He was a married man, who, having been separated from his wife by force, took the habit at Haumont (Belgium). He first was a lay brother; later on he was admitted to theological studies and ordained to the priesthood. He founded the monastery at Silviacum, called Saint-Vulmaire or Samer, near Boulogne. D. 20 July, 689. F. 20 July dp. at Arras and Ghent.—P. B.

Wulphagius (Vulphy), C.; b. at Rue Pontthieu, at the end of the 6th century. He had been married, but left his wife to attach himself to S. Riquier and was ordained to the priesthood. Giving way to a temptation, he returned to his wife. This false step he expiated by austere penance. After a pilgrimage to the Holy Land he led a hermit's life at Regnière-Ecluse, near Centula. He tormented himself principally by thirst. D. 7 June, 643. His relics were brought to Montreuil-sur-Mer in the 9th century. F. 7 June at Montreuil.—P. B.—Mg.

Wulsi = S. Wulfsi.

Wulsin, Bp., C.; b. at London; he was abbot of Westminster after its refounding by S. Dunstan, about 960. In 970, he was chosen bishop of Sherborne, Dorset, where he introduced monks to serve the cathedral.

D. at Sherborne, about 983. F. 8 Jan.—St.

Wulstan (Wulfstan, Wolstan), Bp., C., O. S. B. He was a native of Long Itchington, Warwickshire; educated at Evesham and Peterborough. He took the Benedictine habit at Worcester, was chosen cathedral prior and (in 1062) bishop of Worcester. He was the last bishop appointed under Anglo-Saxon rule and devoted his life entirely to the care of his diocese. He rebuilt his cathedral in the simple Saxon style and vigorously opposed simony and concubinage among the clergy. After the battle of Hastings (1066) he attached himself to William the Conqueror. Humble, but energetic, he refused to resign when Archbishop Lanfranc demanded it (he would surrender his staff only to Edward the Confessor) and, unlike other Anglo-Saxon dignitaries, retained his see. D. at Worcester, 19 Jan., 1095. He is patron of Worcester. F. 19 Jan. dp. in all England; also at Ferentino, Italy. Tr. rel. 7 June in the Sarum Calendar.—St.—L. S.—Angl.—Hamp.

Wulvella (Gulval), V., abbess, a sister of Ss. Bidwell and Jutwara; she is patroness of Gulval in Cornwall; at Laneast she is joint patroness with S. Sidwell. F. 12 Nov.—B. G., IV, 362.

Wunibald (Wynnebald), abbot, C.; b. in Devon, England, about 702. He was a son of S. Richard, "the King," and a brother of Ss. Willibald and Walburga. After his father's death he finished his studies at Rome and returned to England (730). With a younger brother he again went to Rome, where S. Boniface, on his third visit (739), engaged him, ordained him priest, and gave him seven churches, which he attended from Sulzenbrücken, near Erfurt. Driven away by the Saxons, he went to Vils in Bavaria, from there to Mayence (748), joined his brother Willibald at Eichstätt, and founded the monastery of Heidenheim, where he was abbot (with S. Walburga) and died, after a sickness of three years, 18 Dec., 716. F. 18 Dec. dp. maj. at Eichstätt (Pmp.)—Bat., 430.—Stamm., 490.—H. L.—H. D.

Xene = S. Eusebia.

Xenia (Xene), a Greek M., who died by fire. F. 18 Jan., Mz.

Xenia (Xene), deaconess, V., and her two maid-servants. She was the only daughter of a Roman senator at Constantinople. To avoid marriage, she fled with her two maids to Cyprus. From there she was sent by S. Epiphanius to Alexandria and received the veil from the Patriarch Theophilus, changing her name from Eusebia to Xenia. Later on she founded the nunnery of S. Stephen, near S. Andrew's monastery, in Caria. She lived in the 5th century. F. 24 Jan., full office in the Greek Church; also in the Coptic Church.—Syn., 268.—MGR.—Arab.—Jac.

Xenophon, C. His "Life" resembles the romance of S. Eustachius. He was a patrician of Constantinople, the father of two sons, John and Arcadius, who were sent to study at Beirut, but were shipwrecked and cast on shore at different places. Both became monks. On a pilgrimage to Jerusalem Xenophon, his wife Martha (Mary), and the sons met, whereupon Xenophon and Martha gave their property to the poor and entered monasteries. There are several versions of this legend in the Oriental languages. F. 26 Jan., Rom. Mart.; in the Greek Church, full office; 30 Sept., Syr. Men.; 15 Nov. in the Coptic Church.—Syn., 124.—Comm.—H. * Za-Michael (Oz or Guba), one of the "Nine Saints" of Abyssinia. They were Coptic Monophysite monks, who, about the year 480, in the time of King Ameda, came to Abyssinia and revived or re-organized Christianity there, so that the Ethiopians count this as a kind of a second conversion of their country. Their names were: Aragawi, Pantaleon, Garima, Guba (Za Michael), Likanos, Alef, Saham (Sehma), Afse (Afe), and Adimata (Yemata)—Fortescue, Lesser Churches, 297. F. 11 Oct.; v. Nine Saints.

Zabdal, an alleged disciple of the Apostles; he was thrown into an oven with Malael.—Scherin., 349.

Zabdas = S. Zambdas.

Zacchaeus, the rich publican at Jericho, who was honored by Christ's visit. He was a Jew by birth and probably had leased the tolls of the city and neighborhood from a Roman knight. The French traditions of his arrival in Gaul (v. S. Amator, or S. Silvanus of Berry) are legendary. In the Apostolic Constitutions and other works he is called companion of S. Peter and first bishop of Caesarea in Palestine. More probably, however, the Zacchaeus who was bishop of Caesarea lived in the second century. F. in the Coptic Church, 20 Apr.; also in MGr. Buch.—Scherin.

* Zacchaeus, abbot of Medik monastery in Egypt. F. 4 May.—Cal. Copt.

Zacchaeus, "oeconomus" of Tabenna monastery in Egypt, about 347.

Zacchaeus and Theodorus, brothers, Mm., in Egypt; they were drowned in the Nile. F. 24 May, Mrt.

Zacchaeus, 4th bishop of Jerusalem after S. James. Some martyrologists suppose him to be the Zacchaeus, little of stature, who climbed into the sycamore tree to see Jesus pass by; but there is no authority for this statement. He was probably bishop from 111–116. F. 23 Aug., Rom. Mart., dp. at Jerusalem; 27 Aug., Syr. Men., Rb. Sl.—H. L.—Rams.

Zacchaeus, M., at Antioch, in Syr. Mart., Achel., 39, 3 Oct.; he is now unknown.

Zacchaeus, deacon at Gadira, and Alphaeus. They were beheaded at Caesarea in Palestine, in 303, after being scourged, scraped with iron hooks, and racked, with their feet stretched to the fourth hole for a night and day. F. 17 Nov., Rom. Mart., dp. at Jerusalem; 18 Nov., MGr., Mz.

* Zacharias, 64th (Coptic, i.e., Monophysite) Patriarch of Alexandria (1002–1031). At his time the Mussulmen destroyed many Christian churches in Egypt. F. 3 Jan.—Arab-Jac.

* Zacharias, M. After having apostatized he returned to the faith, was tied to a tree by the Turks, and tormented to death, at Patrae, Morea, 20 Jan., 1782. F. 20 Jan., Mz.

* Zacharias, an Abyssinian saint. F. 29 Jan., Cal. Copt.

* Zacharias, Bp. of Sacha in Egypt; he had been secretary to the Vezir of Egypt, but resigned and took a monk's tonsure in the mountains of Egypt. F. 15 Feb.—Syn., 309.

Zacharias, Patriarch of Jerusalem, 609-631. He had been warden of the sacred vessels at the cathedral of Constantinople, but was taken prisoner when Jerusalem was occupied by the Persians, in 614. Modestus, abbot of S. Theodosius, was appointed his vicar, but Zacharias was restored to his see at Jerusalem by Emperor Heraclius, in 629. D. in 631. F. 21 Feb., Mz., MGr.

Zacharias, C., Pope, 10 Dec. 741-752. B. at S. Severina, Calabria, of Greek parents. He was eloquent and learned (he translated the Dialogues of S. Gregory into Greek), energetic and prudent. Four times by his intervention he kept back the Lombard kings, Liutprand and Rachis, from further invasions and obtained a 40 years' peace in 742 and 744. Liutprand even gave back to the Roman Ducatus four cities which he had taken in 739. During the pontificate of Zachary the moral and political ascendancy of the papacy made great strides. He supported the organizational activity of S. Boniface in the Frankish kingdom and indirectly approved the election of Pepin and the assumption by him of the crown of France (coronation, 1 May, 725, two months after Zachary's death). Important are his two letters to Emperor Constantine Copronymus, whom he asked to reestablish the cult of images. To regulate questions of discipline he held synods at Rome in 743 and 745. D. 15 March, 752, and was buried at S. Peter's. F. 13 March, Rom. Mart., dp. at Rome; at Athens and in the diocese of Sanseverina.—C. E.—Buch.—W.W.

* Zacharias, a schismatic bishop at Prusa in Bithynia, who was killed by the Turks, in 1802. F. 22 May, Mz.

Zacharias, second Bp. of Vienne, alleged disciple of S. Peter, successor of S. Crescens, reputed disciple of S. Paul. He was martyred outside the gate of Gratianus, at the age of 100 years, and is called the Protomartyr of Gaul. A legend says that he brought to Vienne the tablecloth on which Our Lord instituted the Blessed Sacrament. His existence is very doubtful; perhaps he was invented by some ecclesiastical forger in the 9th century. F. 26 May, Rom. Mart.—Comm. P. B.—Mg.

* Zacharias, M.; b. at Prusa in Bithynia; he was killed by the Turks, in 1802. F. 28 May, Mz.

Zacharias, M., at Nicomedia, otherwise unknown; some martyrologies assign him to Aquileja. F. 10 June, Rom. Mart.—Comm.

Zacharias, M., Bp. of Lyons, successor of S. Irenaeus. He buried his holy predecessor in the crypt of S. John's, between Ss. Epipodius and Alexander, in the third century. F. 28 June.—P. B.

Zacharias, father of St. John the Baptist, a Jewish priest of the class of Abias. His vision in the Temple, is related in the first chapter of St. Luke's Gospel. He was inspired to sing the magnificent canticle "Benedictus." The Roman Martyrology makes no mention of his having died for the cause of Christianity; but such was the opinion of St. Epiphanius, St. Basil, St. Cyril of Alexandria, and other Greek Fathers. According to the apocryphal Protoevangel, he was slain by command of Herod in the Temple, between the porch and the altar, because he refused to tell where his son John could be found. His relics were discovered on Feb. 11, 415. His name is in the diptychs of the Mozarabic Mass. F. 5 Nov., Rom. Mart. dp. 2 cl. 5 Nov. in the Mountains of Judea. In the Greek Church, 5 Sept., full office; 16 Dec. in the Syrian Church; 16 May in the Maronite and Melchite Churches; 5 Sept. in the Coptic Church; —H. L.—Rams.

Zacharias, the eleventh and most eminent of the twelve Lesser Prophets. He was a son of Barachias, of sacerdotal family, but not the son of the Jojoda-Barachias mentioned Matth. XXIII, 35. Born in Babylonia; he prophesied in the same year with Aggaeus, the second year of Darius Hystaspes, 520 B.C. He returned to Jerusalem when very old. F. 6 Sept., Rom. Mart., sem. at Jerusalem; in the Greek Church, 8 Feb., full office.—Scherm., 70—C. E.—W.W.—Syn., 301 (9 Febr.)

Zacharias, son of Jojoda (Matth. XXIII, 35), a Jewish priest who, towards the end of the reign of King Joas of Judah (836-797 B.C.), strenuously combated idolatry and was, therefore, stoned in the proaulion of the Temple ("between the temple and the altar"). "Son of Barachias" is an error of a copyist. F. 5 Sept. in the Coptic Church.—Buch.

Zacharias, "the Wanderer," a hermit who lived with his father Cyron in the desert of Scete. He is said to have ruined the beauty of his body by a bath in the Natron Lake. He spent 45 years in the desert under S. Isidore, abbot. He is celebrated in the Canon of S. Theodore Studita. F. 10 Oct. in the Coptic Church; also 5 Dec.; v. S. Cyrion.—Syn., 68.

Zeno, M., Bp. of Verona. B. in Mauretania, elected bishop of Verona, 8 Dec., 362; d. in peace, 12 Apr., 371. He mastered the rhetorical arts, was well versed in pagan and Christian literature, and was a strenuous champion of the Church against receding paganism, Arianism, and various abuses. He was the first explicit defender in the Western Church of Mary's virginity before, in and after the birth of Jesus. He is principal patron of Verona. For his labors and sufferings he is called "martyr." F. 12 Apr., Rom. Mart., MGr.; at Verona, 12 Apr. dp. 1 cl. oct.; F. of his Ordination, 9 Dec. dp. maj.; Tr. rel. (under Pepin), 21 May dp. maj. He is also titular of the Cathedral of Pistoja in Tuscany; 12 Apr. dp. maj. (Pmp.) at Freising (Bavaria).—H. L.—P. B.—Mg.—Off. pr.

Zeno, M., at Nicomedia; v. S. Victor, 20 Apr.

Zeno, M., at Axiopolis; v. S. Quirillus, 9 May, or S. Cyrillus, 12 May.

Zeno, deacon of S. Ragnobert of Bayeux, 7th century. F. 16 May.—P. B.

Zeno, M., 12 June, Mrt.

Zeno and Triphyllius, Greek bishops of Leucosia in Cyprus. F. 12 June, MGr.—Cypr.

Zeno, an anchorite of the 4th century in the desert of Scete in Egypt; a disciple of S. Silvanus; he left memorial verses, which are in the Greek Menaea. His "Life" in the Menaea is spurious. F. 19 June, MGr.

Zeno and Zenas, Mm. Zeno was a rich citizen of Philadelphia in Arabia, who gave his property to the poor and set free his slaves. He was arrested with his servant Zenas and beheaded. His relics are at Constantinople in the church of S. George (in Cyparissio). F. 22 June, MGr., Mz; 23 June, Rom. Mart., dp. in Jerusalem (Lat.)—H. L.

Zeno, a tribune (?), and companions, Mm., at Rome. The Rom. Mart. registers these Christian Martyrs as numbering 10,204. The entry is, in fact, the record of the wholesale massacre of the Christians who had been sentenced to toil at the construction of the gigantic baths of Diocletian, still prominent among Roman ruins (opposite the Railway Station). The St. Zeno mentioned by name may have been their chief spokesman (a former tribune?). The butchery, which doubtless was spread over many days, or even weeks, took place before the beginning of the great persecution. The poor toilers, when the buildings were finished, were dragged to the temple of Mars, outside the present Porta Pia, to sacrifice or be killed. Their remains were buried at the "Tre Fontane" (cemetery of S. Zeno), where now stands the church of S. Maria Scala Coeli. Many of these relics, including those of S. Zeno, were brought to S. Prassede by Pope Paschalis I, in 822, and now rest in the chapel "Orto del Paradiso." F. 9 July, Rom. Mart., dp. at S. Prassede, at the Tre Fontane, Rome, at S. Nicolò in Bari.—Unt. Rom., 316.—P. B.—H. L.—R. Sott., 523.

Zeno, Mimias, Vitalis, Rufinus, Evangelius, Urisius, and Agnitus, reputed Mm. at Tomi on the Black Sea. Mart. Hier., 9 July.—Chev.

Zeno, M., at Alexandria; v. S. Serapion, 13 July.

Zeno and Justina, Mm. Justina, a native of Trieste (Istria), dedicated her virginity to Christ. By her constancy under torture, she converted Zeno, a friend of the judge. Both were beheaded, about 286. Their unreliable "acts" transfer to Justina the story of S. Dorothea sending fruit from paradise (to Zeno). F. 13 July, dp. at Trieste.—Off. pr.—A. S.

Zeno, M., at Alexandria; v. S. Philip, 15 July.

Zeno, M., in Egypt; v. S. Ammonius, 23 July (20 Dec.)

Zeno, M., a warrior at Alexandria. F. 30 July.—Cal. Copt.

Zeno, M.; v. S. Neophytus, 11 Aug.

Zeno, C., a deacon of S. Ragnobert of Bayeux, Normandy, at the end of the 9th century; his relics were brought to Varzy (Nièvre). F. 21 Aug. and 16 May.—P. B.—Mg.

Zeno, M., at Potamon in Thrace, a companion of S. Agathonicius, 22 Aug.—Mrt.

Zeno and his sons Concordius and Theodorus, Mm., at Nicomedia in 303, not under Julian. F. 2 Sept., Rom. Mart.—H. L.

Zeno, Chariton, and Archontion, Mm. The Russians unite the three. According to the Rom. Mart. (5 Sept.) and MGr., Zeno was burned in a caldron of liquid lead. Chariton was thrown into a lime pit. Archontion is not found in the Rom. Mart.—H. L.

Zeno, M., at Melitene; v. S. Eudoxius, 5 Sept.

Zeno, Eusebius, and Nestabus, Mm., brothers and citizens of Gaza in Palestine; during the reign of Julian the Apostate they were dragged through the streets until dead (362). F. 8 Sept., Rom. Mart.; 21 Sept., MGr.

Zeno, M., a priest in Palestine; v. S. Peleus, 19 Sept.

Zeno, a reputed disciple of the Apostles; he is said to have preached the Gospel at Diospolis in Egypt. F. 27 Sept., MGr.

* Zeno (Abba Zeno), "the Syrian," a hermit in Egypt. F. 16 Dec.—Cal. Copt.

Zeno, M., in Alexandria, in 249. F. 20 Dec.

Zeno, M., a soldier at Nicomedia; because he laughed at Diocletian, when the latter offered a sacrifice to Ceres, his jaws were broken and he was beheaded, in 303. F. 22 Dec., Rom. Mart.—H. L.

Zeno, C., Bp. of Majuma in Palestine, in the 5th century; he ordained S. John Chrysostom lector. F. 26 Dec., Mart. Rom.—H. L.

Zeno and Donatus, Roman Mm. F. 31 Dec.—H. L.

Zenobia, V., M., at Aegae; v. S. Zenobius, 30 Oct.

Zenobius (Zanobi), C., Bp. of Florence, 5th century. B. at Florence of the Geronimo family. As archdeacon of the Church of Florence he was called to Rome by Pope Damasus and constituted deacon of the Roman Church. The same Pontiff sent him as his legate to Constantinople to combat the Macedonian heresy. Elected bishop of his native city, he was famous for miracles and great eloquence. F. 25 May, Rom. Mart., dp. 1 cl. oct. (princ. patron) at Florence; 26 Jan., Tr. rel. dp. maj.—H. L.—Off. pr.

Zenobius, M., in Isauria; he had a feast in the Old Syrian Mart. on 14 June.—Achel. 39.

Zenobius, Capitolinus, Emerita, Italica, Jovianus, and Julius, Mm., at Antioch. F. 24 Aug.—Chev.

Zenobius, M., a priest and physician at Sidon in Phenicia. He was arrested, dragged to Antioch with S. Tyrannio of Tyre, and lacerated with iron hooks. He died during torture, in 310. Probably he is identical with S. Zenobius of Aegae. F. 29 Oct., Rom. Mart.; in Syr. Men., 4 July, 17 Apr.—H. L.

Zenobius and Zenobia, Mm. Zenobius was a physician and bishop of Aegae in Cilicia, on the coast of Asia Minor. He was beheaded with his sister after various tortures in 285 (290) or 304. They belong to the Greek "Healers." Zenobius seems to be identical with the homonymous saint of Antioch. His cult at Aegae may have been imported and the figure of Zenobia may be legendary (a duplicate of Zenobius). F. 30 Oct., Rom. Mart.; in the Greek Church full office; 3 Nov. in the Coptic Church.—Luc., 260.—H. L.—Rams.

Zenobius, M., at Tripoli; v. S. Lucianus, 24 Dec.

* Zeoras (Ze'ura), Stylite, to whom a church was dedicated at Amida. F. in the Syr. Men. Rb. Sl. 10 June, 16 March, 11 May.

Zephan, an Irish saint. F. 19 Sept.—O'H., IX, 457.

Zephaniah = S. Sophonias, prophet.

Zephyrin, M., Pope, 199–217. He condemned Theodotus, the money changer, and Asclepiodotus, who taught that the Divinity was united to the human nature of Christ only at His baptism and who tried to set up an antipope (Natalis). During his pontificate Tertullian apostatized and became a Montanist. Zephyrin's relics are in S. Silvestro in Capite. F. in the entire Latin Church, 26 Aug. simpl. (not before the 13th century); at Rome dp.—Buch.—C. E.—R. Sott. 158.

Zeticus, M., of Cynossus; done to death at Gorthyna, Crete, with S. Theodulus, Saturninus, etc. F. 23 Dec., Rom. Mart.

Zetulus, Primus, Nonnus, Euresus, and Julius, Mm., in Pamphylia. F. 28 May.—Chev.

Zimius, C., a priest, at Altmühl (Griestetten) in Bavaria; v. S. Marinus, 12 June.

* Zina, a holy woman, an Abyssinian saint, 21 Oct.—Cal. Copt.

* Zina (Mar Zina). F. in the Syr. Men. Rb. Sl. 22 Nov.

* Zinai, a Nestorian hermit, C. He built a monastery on the Little Zab, an affluent of the Tigris; he also wrote an ascetical treatise; 7th century.—Nest., 73.

Zita, V., the recognized special patron of domestic servants. B. in 1218, at Monsagrati (Bozzanello), near Lucca. At the age of 12 years she entered the service of the Fratinelli family at Lucca and remained there to her death. At first misunderstood and maltreated by her employers and her fellow servants, she was highly venerated in later years. D. 27 Apr., 1278. Her body is in S. Frediano. Her cult was approved 26 May, 1278; she was canonized 5 Sept., 1696. F. 27 Apr., Rom. Mart., dp. maj. at Lucca (she is not the patron of Lucca); dp. in the diocese of Pontremoli.—H. L.—F. J.—Rams.

Zoe, M., at Attalia; v. S. Hesperus, 2 May.

Zoe, alleged Roman M., wife of S. Nicostratus, a Roman official. She is said to have been tormented by hunger and suffocated by smoke. S. Zoe is a very problematic figure of the hagiographic romance of S. Sebastian, although she has been received into the official Roman Martyrology. She may have existed, but her connection with the story of S. Sebastian is probably an invention. F. 5 July, Rom. Mart.—H. L.

Zoellus, Felix, Silvanus, Servilius, and Diocles, Mm. They probably belong to Syria, not to Istria (Rom. Mart.) Servilius suffered in Istria, the rest at some unknown place in Syria. F. 24 May, Rom. Mart.; at Parenzo (erroneously) in Istria simpl.—Comm.

Zoerard, hermit, C. O. Camald., also called Andrew (Sucrad, Zuirard). He was a son of a Polish peasant and became a monk at Zabor, near Neitra, Hungary, where he led an austere life in a hollow tree. D. in 1020. F. 16 July dp. 2 cl. in the diocese of Neitra; v. Andrew and Benedict.—H. L.

Zoilus, C. B. at Aquileja. He buried the bodies of several martyrs, e.g., S. Chrysogonus, at Grado. Died in the beginning of the fourth century, on 27 Jan. F. at Zara in Dalmatia, 23 Dec. (minor patron) dp. maj.; at Aquileja, now Udine, 2 Jan., dp.; Tr. rel. at Zara, 16 Dec. dp.—H. L.—P. B.—Mg.

Zoilus, a Greek M.; v. S. Zeno, 3 March.

Zoilus, a Roman, who was hanged to a tree, Eleutherius, a Persian, and Theodulus, who was beheaded under Shapur II in Persia. F. 13 Apr., Mz.

Zoilus and Servulus, Mm., at Lystra. F. 24 (23) May and 5 June.—H. L.

Zoilus, M. B. of noble parents at Cordova in Spain and beheaded, perhaps under Dio-cletian, with 19 companions. Their bodies were found under King Reccared, and brought to Carrion monastery, in 1083. F. dp. at Cordova and Palencia, 27 June.—H. L.—P. B.

Zoilus, M., in Africa; v. S. Timothy, 30 June.

Zoilus, M., at Antioch; v. S. Severianus, 1 July.

Zoilus, M., at Cordova; v. S. Eugenius, 18 July.

Zoilus, M., at Philippopolis; 24 Aug. (not in Mrt.)—Mz.

Zoilus, a Greek Martyr. F. 22 Dec., Mz.

Zoilus, a hermit in the desert of Scete in Egypt; a disciple of S. Agathon and S. Pachomius, in the 5th century, one of the ascetes praised by S. Theodore the Studite.—H. L.

Zonus, Bp., the deacons Alexander and Dunus, and the deacon Orion, Mm., at Alexandria in Egypt. F. 12 Febr., Hier. Mart. Zonus and Dunus are remnants of the name of S. Migdonus, the principal saint of Feb. 12; he belongs to Nicomedia. Alexander belongs to Gaius of Feb. 10. Orion apparently belongs to Alexandria; he is the saint of Feb. 9. This is one of the numerous confused groups of the martyrology of "Jerome."—Eg., 69.

Zophorus, M., at Caesarea in Cappadocia. F. 19 Nov.—Mrt.

Zorobabel (Serubabel), son of Salathiel, grandson of King Jojakim, leader of the first caravan of 42,360 Jews, who returned from exile. He and the High Priest Josue re-erected the altar of sacrifice (Esd. II, 2) and laid the foundations for the new Temple, in 536 B.C. With the permission of King Darius he finished the Temple, in 519 B.C. F. 13 July in some Mrt.—Buch.

Zosima, M., at Porto Romano; v. S. Eutropius, 15 July.

Zosimas (Zosimus), M., and Athanasius, hermits in Cilicia, about 304. When Zosimas patiently bore torture for Christ's sake the commentariusius (superintendent of prisoners), named Athanasius, believed in Christ and followed Zosimas into the desert, where both died in peace. F. 3 Jan., Rom. Mart.; 4 Jan., MGr., Mz.; also 19 Sept.—Comm.

Zosimas, M.; v. S. Asterius, at Rome, 18 Jan.

* Zosimas, Bp. of Cilicia, C., a monk at Mt. Sina, who was sent to Alexandria on business affairs of his monastery, and was elected bishop of Babylon (now Cahira) on the Nile. D. at Mt. Sina, in the 6th century. F. 24 Jan., MGr.; 4 June, Mz.

Zosimas, M., at Carthage; v. S. Heraclius, 11 March.

Zosimas, C., Bp. of Syracuse. By the will of his parents, and against his personal inclination, he lived from childhood in the monastery of S. Lucy, where, having obtained peace by prayer and mortification, he was elected abbot. Later he became bishop of Syracuse (649–662). He was renowned for his love of the poor. He is patron against pestilence. F. 30 March, Rom. Mart., dp. at Syracuse; 21 Jan., MGr.

Zosimas, M., at Tomi; v. S. Evagrius, 3 Apr.

* Zosimas, of Werbesom, abbot, a disciple of S. Cornelius Komelski. He founded a monastery on Werbesom island, in Lake Bjelosero, Russia. D. in 1550. F. 4 Apr., Mrt.

Zosimas (Zosimus), of Palestine, C., a monk of the monastery of S. John the Baptist. After an ascetical life of 53 years, he was tempted to pride by his own spiritual perfection, but was taught humility by the penitential life of S. Mary of Egypt, to whom he brought Holy Communion before she died. He died in 525. F. 4 Apr., Rom. Mart., MGr., Mz.; dp. at Jerusalem.—H. L.—Comm.

* Zosimas, abbot of Solowetzk, C. Born at Tolz, gov. Novgorod. With S. Germanus, he founded the famous Solowetzki monastery on an island in the White Sea, and became its abbot. In spite of the rigid climate of the icy sea, he found many disciples. D. in 1478, and was canonized by the Russian synod, in 1547. His relics were elevated, 8 Aug., 1566. F. in the Russian Church, 17 Apr.; at Solowetzki, Tr. rel. 8 Aug.—Mrt.—Mz.
